Reagan plea for IMF funding

From Frances Williams and Bailey Morris, Washington

President Reagan strongly attacked the United States Congress vesterday warning of a global "economic nightmare" if warning Republicans and Democrats are unable to resolve their differences and approve $8.5 billion in new funds for the International Monetary Fund.

in a hard-hitting address opening the formal sessions of the IMF's joint annual meeting with the World Bank, Mr Reagan told the world's finance ministers and central bankers that the increase n funds was crucial to the present "This legislation is not only

erucial to the recovery of America's trading partners and to the stability of the entire financial system but it is also necessary to a sustained recovery in the United States", Mr Reagan said in his first public attack against the euding Congressmen

Delegates from 150 nations also heard impassioned appeals, from the heads of the IMF and the World Bank, for adequa resources to manage the world's continuing debt crisis. Much of the focus of the preliminary sessions before the formal opening meeting was on the urgent need for the US Congress to break a deadlock over legislation approving the US contribution. The President's grim warning of the consequences that would result from failure to approve the funds echoed that of senior British officials. As one senior British official said: "What would cause the whole bloody thing to collapse is if Congress fails to pass the US quota increase."

Americans put on a brave face

From David Miller, Newport

The 3ft iron bolt which for 132 years has screwed the America's Cup to a table in the New York Yacht Club was presented yesterday to the Perth property and oil millionaire, Mr Alan Bond, head of the victorious Australia II syndicate.

At a ceremony at the Marble House, former home of the Vanderbilt family memorabilia on fashionable Bellevae Avenue bere, a crowd of about 200 saw the New York Yacht Club commodore Mr Robert Stone, and ex-commodore, Mr Bus Mossbacher, hand over the cup to Royal Perth Yacht Club commodore, Mr Peter Daiziell.

In giving the bolt to Mr Bond, Mr Stone said that he hoped he would not be keeping it for 132 years, but felt be ought to have it. The losing helmsman, Mir Dennis Conner, was not present.

The presentation ceremony came as a surprise. It had been expected that it would take place in two or three days' time in the club premises in New York, Mr nutting a brave face on end of sporting history, said that there was no other country to whom the club would rather hand the trophy.

This had been the sixth Australian challenge. Scarching for a simile that did not quite match the historic moment on the terrace at the rear of the mansion beech trees, Mr Stone said he felt be knew how the Australians

From Nicholas Ashford

Washington Officials said yesterday that the United States still expected to go ahead with the deployment of the first 41 Pershing 2 and groundlaunched cruise missiles in West Germany and Britain in December despite the latest conciliatory gesture by President Reagan towards the Soviet Union.

However, they did not believe that the initial negative reaction for Moscow was its last word on the new US initiative and expressed hope that the Soviet Union might soon produce a serious counter-proposal at the Geneva arms reduction talks.

But they did not expect this to happen until Nato had proved its ability to weather the anti-nuclear demonstrations expected to take place in Western Europe this It was partly to defuse antiusclear sentiment in Europe that Mr Reagan decided publicly to unveil the new US proposals to reduce intermediate range nuclear

(INF) weapons in his speech to the UN General Assembly on The officials expressed the view that as a public relations exercise the President's speech had been largely successful. Mr Reagan discussed his new initiative with President Koivisto of Finland during meeting at the White House yesterday. The main American concession would allow the Soviet Union to keep more INF missiles in Europe than the United States so long as there was "global equality" in the number of warheads. America also agreed to include nuclear-capable medium-range bomber tircraft in the Geneva talks and to reduce the number of Pershing 2 missiles in proportion to the overall number of missiles the United States would eventually

Those who are against radical change in the planning system say that it is already so heavily loaded with democratic checks and balances that it is difficult to bring into being any necessary develop-ment. The introduction of more checks and balances would make the system so unwieldy and longwinded as to be unworkable.

The planning system is thus surrounded by suspicions: that ministers ignore the rules, that farmers are left outside the rules, that public bodies use the rules to their own advantage and that objectors play the rules in order to delay a just decision against them. There is no clear path through the tangle of suspicions which surrounds the system.

Dinner at Maxim's for China's high society

From David Bonavia

Peking's high society gathered last night at the new branch of the famous Maxim's Restaurant of Paris, for a dinner bested by its owner, M Pierre Cardin, the fashion designer.

Foreign ambassadors arrived in their chauffeur-driven limonsines to eat a doubtlessly exquisite dinner. Chinese spec. tators - who at an average worker's wage of 50 to 60 yuan (£16 to £20) a month the cost of a dinner at Maxim's would feed for months - gathered to watch the glittering procession of some 350 diplomats and other dignitaries

The foreign press corps was treated to a modest but tasty dinner of fricasse de fruits do mer, filet de boef, with gratine dauphinoise and a raspberry sorbet. They drank Poully Fuissé 81. Chatean Taillan 79, and Maxim's own champaone.

For the previous week wives of correspondents had schemed and intrigued to get invitations to the dinner which was originally meant only for their gastronomic spouses. One or two succeeded. The Chinese staff, though trained at only four days' notice, pet up a

The Brotherhood's heyday was probably in the 1930s and 1940s when it played a crocial role in shaping and uniting the forces of Afrikaner nationalism at a time of often deep and bitter divisions, for example over South Africa's participation in the Second World War. Many Afrikanets openly sympathized with Hitler's Germany.

Yet, while part of its raison d'être was removed in 1948, the Broederbond continued to serve successive National Party prime ministers as a most valuable propaganda instrument. The question is whether, in its present state of disarray, it can go on performing this function as effectively.

Although Mr P. W. Botha, the Prime Minister, seems to have won the allegiance of the organization's leadership for his modest constitutional reforms, which would permit a very limited sharing of power with mixed-blood Coloureds and Indians (but not with black Africans), there is clear evidence of wide disaffection among its

It was clear, he said, that the base would be designed to allow Britain to extend its global strategic interests, and he gave warning of the dangers of transforming the South Atlantic into a new source of conflict between East and West.

its Latin allies to table a motion calling for the restauption of negotiations when the assembly debates the issue later this year.

There is little doubt that Argentina will win a resounding majority in the assembly for its stand, but it was clear from Schor Aguirre's remarks that European support is the most prized. Last year a majority of the European Community abstained in the vote on negotiations while the United States sided with Argentina.

In a right of reply, Mr Nicholas Barrington, Britain's representative, said that the many and varied accessions made by Argentina were without foundation. He said that Argentina had attempted to airbrash out the fact that it had broken off from the negatigation processes with from the negotiating process with the deliberate and unprovoked invasion of the islands last year.

 If it has been off the road for some years you may need to take action before 30 November 1983.

 If you have a new-style computer-produced Registration Document (V5) for this vehicle you need not do anything. Otherwise, please read on.

WHAT IS IMPORTANT ABOUT 30 NOVEMBER?

After this date the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre cannot accept applications to record old vehicles under their original registration numbers. This means that you will lose the use of your number unless you act now.

WHAT MUST YOU DO?

Complete and send the coupon below to the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre to make sure that your claim to the number is considered. Any old documents (not photo-copies) for the vehicle, eg an old style "log book", tax disc or MOT certificate, should be attached to the coupon below.

WHAT HAPPENS NEXT?

If everything is in order you will not lose your number and DVLC will send you a new-style registration document.

WHAT IF YOU DON'T WRITE TO DVLC BEFORE 30 NOVEMBER?

You will lose your present registration number. You will still be able to record your vehicle at the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Centre but you will be given a different number.

Keen though we are to find more oil beneath the waves, we don't much enjoy plunging beneath them ourselves. Particularly in the North Sea, which is most unfriendly.

Frankly, we'd rather watch video.

And there's a British company called UDI (part of the John Brown Group) which is helping us do just that. Indeed, the help's been mutual. UDI reclinology owes much to Shelks encouragement.

Their sonar equipment builds a picture of the sea-bed by bouncing sound-waves off it; and then the cunning fellows convert the sounds into video numbers.

So you can see what the bottom of the sea sounds like. Mind blowing.

And who, apart from oilmen, would want to use such equipment?

You'd be surprised.

There's West Midlands County Council, for one. They've used UDI Sonar to delve into old, flooded underground limestone workings.

Similar equipment is helping surveyors of the Thames flood-barrier; and seeking out corrosion in the water-coolers of power stations; and finding underwater debris in the mouths of major ports.

Although our North Sea operations provided the impetus for this technology, it clearly applies anywhere in the world where hazardous underwater conditions make the going tough.

So the export orders are coming in. The Japanese, for instance, are using UDI equipment in their offshore oil and gas industries.

Indeed, you could say that for UDI the picture sounds rather rosy.

The Nuclear Weapons "Freeze" Advertising Campaign

But the process of providing While the purpose of nuclear deterrence is to prevent intentional war, the weapons it requires create the risk of catasweapons to maintain deterrence - the nuclear arms race - has resulted in stockpiled weaponry equal to a million Hiroshima

- The East-West confrontation requires a political solution. The nuclear arms race prevents this.
- Traditional negotiations have failed to stop the nuclear arms race. A "freeze" offers a practical way of stopping the race without loss of security – indeed with improved security for both sides.

REEZE" NUCLEAR WEAPONS I

"To improve national and international security, the United States and the Soviet Union should stop the nuclear arms race. Specifically, they should adopt a mutual freeze on the testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons and of missiles and new aircraft designed primarily to deliver nuclear weapons. This is an essential, verifiable first step towards assening the risk of nuclear war and reducing the nuclear arsenals". - From the United States Freeze proposal, the "Call to halt the nuclear arms race'

The proposal for a nuclear-weapons "freeze" has attracted enormous support in the United States: it has been advocated by Soviet leaders past and present: it is endorsed by the United Nations. In 1982 more than 30% of the U.S. electorate had the opportunity to vote on the "freeze" proposal: 60% of the voters en-

The "freeze" offers a practical way of stopping the nuclear arms race. It provides a way round the difficulties which obstruct traditional negotiations for limiting or reducing nuclear armaments. It offers an opportunity for the nuclear powers to come to terms with the fact that their interests are best served by preparing, not for mutual annihilation, but for common security.

The nuclear arsenals are vastly out of proportion to any conflict of interest between West and East. Could any such conflict be sufficiently serious to require preparation for mutual annihilation? The need for the power blocs of East and West to co-exist without war is a problem requiring a political solution. The nuclear arms race is an abortive search for a technical solution. It has only two foreseeable endings: either in catastrophe, or by being superseded by a political solution. But it is self-perpetuating, and it works against a political solution. Far from providing any remedy for international problems, it increases them. Demand for political action to end it must come from public opinion.

"Freeze" now

The basis for the nuclear weapons freeze must be the present state of affairs. Neither side should try to make it conditional upon reduction of weapons deployed by the other side. since this must make a freeze as unattainable as agreement in traditional negotiations.
Cipponents of the freeze assert that it would "confirm Soviet nuclear superiority". In fact, as the US Department of Defense has stated. the US and USSR are "roughly equal in strategic nuclear power" (2); and as Defense Secretary Weinberger has said, the US has "an immense edge in technology" (3). At the levels of "overkill" that have existed for many years.

Nuclear weapons policies — the real dispute

The real dispute over nuclear weapons policies is not between "unilateral" and "multilateral" disarmers. It is between those who want more weapons and those who do not.

The claim that additional weapons on one side will lead to negotiated reductions on both sides is contrary to repeated experience that it leads

"nuclear superiority" is meaningless. (British governments have made this point when claiming effectiveness for the independent deterrent" against Soviet forces fifty times larger).
Opponents also claim that "verification" would he difficult. In fact this would be easier than so protracted that before they have been con-cluded, a new generation of weapons, to which the negotiations were irrelevant, has been developed. A "freeze" is essential if this is to be only to more weapons on the other side.

The freeze offers a way of stopping the hitherto-unstoppable nuclear arms race, on which all who want this (whether "un-ilateralists" or "multilateralists") should be

Problems with "mutual nuclear deterrence"

Claims are frequently made that nuclear deterr-ence has kept the peace for more than 30 years, that it is a stable system providing an acceptable and the interest as the nuclear arrenals exert, ence has kept the peace for more than 30 years, that it is a stable system providing an acceptable basis for peace and security, and that it is capable of continuing to do so indefinitely.

Whether the absence of war in Europe and between the Western and Eastern blocs is a consequence of nuclear deterrence is open to aroument but not to proof. Clearly the absence of war between the countries of western Europe which were adversaries in 1914-18 and 1939-45 has resulted from such factors as the realisation that common interests outweigh conflicting interests, and, basically, that peace is preferable to war. Such realisations have also contributed to avoidance of war between East and West.

Holocaust by "accident"
Clearly neither of the superpowers has the copability to launch a disarming first strike against the other. To this extent, mutual nucleus lear deterrence may be supposed to be effective in preventing intentional nuclear war. But the weapons created for "deterrence" themselves create the risk of holocaust by accident or mis adventure, or by unintended escalation in some quired to prevent this - but neither the human nor the technical elements in such systems can be infallible. While the weapons remain, risks will remain. The aim should be to reduce, and not to increase, the risk.

But new missiles are now planned, for which is claimed such accuracy that they will provide the capability for a pro-emptive first strike against the adversary's missiles, leaving his cities as hestages; he would thereby he prevented from striking back, and be forced to surrender. For technical and operational reasons this proposi-tion is probably fallacious. But if such missiles are deployed, and if their owners believe in the proposition, both sides must fear that the opponent may attempt such a strike.

A "freeze" now would prevent the deployment of such destabilising new missiles. It would re-with partial arms control.

Arms-control negotiations have generally been and by which stability may be maintained while new relationships are developed. Such "static" deterrence could be maintained with greatly reduced amenals

Paradoxes of nuclear deterrence

Nuclear deterrence is full of paradoxes. It requires both sides, supposedly in order to prevent nuclear holocaust. to prepare to produce the holocaust. Deterrence must be based upon the assumption that in some circumstances the deterrent weapons will be used. For deterrence to be assumed to work, it must be assumed that the adversary can be relied upon to act rationally - to be rationally deterred by the threat. But, as Field Marshal Lord Carver, a former Chief of the British Defence Staff, has noted, in nuclear terms "to pose an unacceptable risk to the enemy automatically poses the same risk to oneself". (4). The threat to use nuclear weapons against a nuclear-armed adversary is essentially suicidal, and irrational. How much confidence can there be that at a time of crisis an adversary faced with an irrational threat will act rationally? (This problem is illustrated by the NATO policy of readiness to make first us of nuclear weapons. The message of a nuclear "warning shot" must be that "We are ready to set off the hologaust, so we hope you are not as mad as we are").

In military theory, military action should serve west and East could serve no political purpose, since there could be no winner. Professor Lawrence Freedman points out (5) that nuclear "strategy", as a basis for peace and security, is the antithesis of strategy: its supposed effec-tiveness depends not upon any controllable use, but upon the dangers of its uncontrollability. The strategy cannot sensibly be backed up by the use of the weaponry upon which it is based, since such use could not lead to success.

paramount importance to replace the doctrine of mutual deterrence. Our alternative is common security. There can be no hope of victory in a nuclear war. . . . International security must rest on a commitment to joint survival rather than on a threat of mutual destruction". (1)

Olof Palme, now Prime Minister of Sweden, wrote in June 1982: "It is of

The foundations for a political solution are already in place, in the understanding on both sides that in nuclear conflict between them there could be no winners, and that the interests of both sides are best served by the development of common interests and interdependent relationships. On both sides there is decreasing confidence in policies which have failed to produce security, but have produced stockpiled nuclear destructive power 1,000,000 times that of the Hiroshima bomb.

The economic and psychological costs of the nuclear arms race are intolerable. In the West there is a special responsibility for insisting that the race be stopped, since not only was it started by the West, but - as shown in the chart, the West has consistently remained in the lead in numbers of weapons and in technological innovation. Where the West has led, the USSR has followed. Nuclear "deterrence" produces the threat against which it is supposed to pro-

"A Freeze has the inestimable virtues of simplicity and practicality. Its benefits to humanity are readily apparent to ordinary human beings . . . There would be no mistaking the moral implications of an agreement to stop the nuclear arms race now, and an intense national and international campaign for ratification could be mounted effectively. To a world increasingly apprehensive over the awesome dangers and technical complexities of the arms race, a Freeze offers the symbol and the substance of hope . . . " - Senator Edward Kennedy (Democrat) and Senator Mark Hatfield (Republican).

The Institutions of the Nuclear Arms Race

Lord Zuckerman, a former Chief Scientific Adviser to British Prime Ministers and to the Ministry of Defence, has shown how this paradox-ridden situation has come about. He quotes (6), the warning of President Eisenhower, in 1961, of the "danger that public policy could itself become the captive of a scien-ific technological effect" and of the "acquisilific-technological clite", and of the "acquisi-tion of unwarranted influence by the militaryindustrial complex". "The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists and will

Lord Zuckerman (6, 8) describes how the nuc-lear arms race "feeds itself": even though "the continued growth of the nuclear arsenals does not increase but decreases security", it con-tinues because "the men in the weapons laboratories have succeeded in creating a world with an irrational foundation, on which a new cerned with invention, development, manufac-ture, marketing and deployment of nuclear weapons – have gained dominance over the politicians. Considerations of defence and security are subordinated to those institutions need for continuity; and in response to that need, and to the climate of fear and suspicion which the nuclear arms race produces, govern-ments adopt policies which are politically and militarily non-ensical.

The demand for a nuclear weapons "freeze" is a demand for the reassertion of proper political

Fantasies

As Lord Carver shows (4), in nuclear policy. strategic reasoning has been replaced by pre-tence and bluff. Bluff may be useful when, if the bluff is called, there is a practicable alternative way out. If the nuclear bluff fails, there is only catastrophe, inability to admit this fact - and all that it implies about the futility of the nuclear arms race - leads to fantasising. When this ex-tends to the acceptance by national leaders of uch fantasies as "winnable" nuclear war, there is no room for complacency.

The result of the failure of strategic reasoning is The result of the failure of strategic reasoning in disarray at every level. Politically, the Western Alliance, which nuclear policy was supposed to strengthen, is increasingly divided. Materially, there is production of weapons systems that are strategically unnecessary, technically unreli-able, even inoperable. Doctrinally, there is chaos, as attempts are made to accommodate new weapons and to incorporate them into the unending vain search for "credibility".

An extreme example of this state of affairs is the MX missile programme: strategically superfluous, because the Soviet first strike capability it is supposed to counter does not exist, its frantic search for a mode of deployment produces increasingly ludicrous propos-

For the deployment of ground-launched cruise missiles (GLCMs) in western Europe, a number of rationales have been produced. The popular view is that the cruise missiles and Pershing IIs are NATO's response to the USSR's SS-26. This view is dismissed by the British Ministry of Defence: while the SS-20s were "not entirely irrelevant", "the essential rationale for the modernisation programme [cruise and Pershing II] is that without a de-monstrable NATO capability to strike sub-strategic targets well inside the Soviet Union (on a limited scale and with greater accuracy than possible with submarine launched bal-listic missiles), the Soviet Union might conclude it could risk escalating a conflict to a point where NATO had no credible response pean targets, and that such strikes could be launched from an afficient to widespread nuclear strikes against Eurolaunched from an effective stinctuary of Soviet territory. The essence of flexible re-sponse is that NATO should possess a spectrum of deterrent options from conventional forces to the strategic level; unless the ageing FIIIs and Vulcans are augmented by the proposed GLCM/Pershing II force a gap could develop in this range of options." (9).

This fantasising about the doctrine of "flexible response" conceals the fact that the GLCM is, like MX, a missile in search of a role and sales. Lord Zuckerman comments (8) that the proposed deployment of cruise missiles in Europe is an "important current illustration of the way laboratories pre-empt strategic decisions – and therefore add rigidity to political discussion. . . . The political reaction in certain NATO countries to the suggested deployment of these weapons on their territory was clearly not anticipated."

While total numbers are only one index of strength, all criteria indicate that the potential of East and West for destroying each other are approximately equal. Claims that this is not so arise from artificial categorisations of weapons systems: because each side has specialised in different directions, comparisons within categories sometimes reveal discrepancies. Overall there is approximate parity of weaponry between West and East

The "Soviet threat"

The usual justification for the amassing of the escalation of the arms race. The other view is nuclear arsenals of the West is the Soviet

This "threat" should be considered in two parts. One is the threat of the USSR's nuclear wcapons targeted upon the West, reciprocally USSR. This threat of mutual destruction is real. The other part is the supposed threat

The fears engendered by the nuclear arms race have nourished, in both West and East, distorted perceptions of the intentions and the strength of the other side.

In the West, two very different views of the USSR are widely held. One is that the USSR is so weak economically that a little extra strain. imposed by striving to match new Western in-itiatives in the nuclear arms race, will bring economic collapse. This belief is influential among those who advocate continuation and ing world domination, or even for less ambitious adventures such as taking over western Europe. The economist C. Gordon Tether has pointed out that the further question needs examination: what conceivable motivation could the USSR bave for an attack upon the West (or vice versa)? (11). As Professor Michael Howard has recently remarked, it is clear that the leaders and people of the USSR have no inclination to become involved "even in a conventional war, let alone in one in which they would suffer all the horific consequences of nuclear destruction" (12).

For Britain a nuclear "freeze" would mean can-cellation, or at least indefinite postponement, of basing of US cruise missiles, and cancellation of Trident.

The targeting capacity of the proposed British Trident Force is 14 times that of the present Polaris force – an increase for which there is no rational military justification. in the US, the Nuclear Weapons Freeze Camni the US, the Nuclear Weapons Freeze Campaign is working for a one-year delay in the deployment of new US missiles in Europe. Delay or cancellation would not harm British or European security, but deployment could be expected to cause disruptions in Europe and NATO and to provoke the USSR to increase its Trident is supposed to maintain the British "independent nuclear deterrent" into the next century. It has to be seen in the context of the history of the British "deterrent". The decision in 1946 to acquire atomic weapons was the first act of atomic proliferation by a minor power. As Lord Zuckerman says: "This highly secret decision was taken without any critical evaluation of the military advantages this step might confer, or of the repercussions of nuclear weaponry on foreign policy". (6). Absence of discussion allowed concealment of the fact that the basic reason for the decision was folic de grandeur:

the supposition that the decline of Britain's intermational significance would in some way be reversed by possession of atomic bombs.
After the USSR developed atomic weapons, an additional motive for Britain to maintain its "deterrent" emerged: disbelief in the US "nuclear umbrella". The public was supposed to be-Trident is supposed to maintain the British "in-

Nuclear weapons "freeze" - implications for Britain lieve that this was providing protection against Soviet aggression, but to British governments, as to US Secretary of Defense Robert McNamas to US secretary of Detense Kopert McNamara (and to General de Gaulle) it seemed inconceivable that the US would commit nuclear suicide to "save" W.Europe – whose destruction would thereby also be ensured. This problem has profound implications for the nuclear armed NATO, discussion of which is overdue. The deterrent effect of weaponry must depend upon the possibility of its use, and at no time has it been possible to identify any circumstance in which the British "independent

A recent report of the American Central Intelligence Agency to the Joint Economic Commit-tee of Congress (10) examines the first of these views, and finds it false. But this still leaves the nuclear deterrent" could be used against the supposed potential enemy, the USSR, with advantage to Britain. As Lord Carver (4) has shown, the history of the British "independent nuclear deterrent" is one of costly futility. The moral case against the moral case agains British "bomb" may not convince the advocates of nuclear deterrence; but the rational case against it, that it is entirely lacking in utility and military value, is unanswerable.

Stopping the nuclear arms race should not be a party-political issue. In the United States, the "freeze" is supported by Republicans and Democrats. People of any political persuasion who want the nuclear arms race to be ended by political agreement before it ends in catastrophe should support the "freeze".

The illusions surrounding the "independent nuclear deterrent" and the nuclear-armed NATO should not be allowed to stand in the way of the opportunity for baiting and reversing the nuclear arms race that is offered by a nuclear-weamons "freeze".

This advertisement has been paid for by the sponsors named below. Sponsored advertising is a method - with much potentiality - by which people can publicly express their demand for an end to the nuclear arms race. A large proportion of the public is already in favour of a freeze, so conversion of more people is less important than mobilisation of those who are already convinced, into making effective demands for political action.

If you agree with us, please help to make the facts known; and support the demand for a freeze by joining us in sponsoring further advertisements. Please bring the campaign to the attention of friends, colleagues, &c. Reprints of this advertisement are available (see reply coupon).

The campaign for a nuclear weapons freeze began in the United States. This advertisement is organised by an independent British group as part of the process of internationalising the demand for a freeze. Overseas sponsors, and co-operation with groups in other countries, will be welcome.

SPECTRUM

Hot on the heels of the Whimsical Fifties and the Swinging Sixties came the baying, destructive anarchy of punk. In his concluding article on postwar style, Bevis Hillier looks back at the growth of young disenchantment in the Cynical Seventies and sees within its conspicuous acts of violent bad taste the seeds of hope as soon as they happened. In January of shock had been mostly exhausted by 1980, the enterprising Preston Polytechnic Library held a show called The Seventies. The catalogue began with an alphabetical list of people and things plaint and Deep Throat. The Underthe organizers associated with the decade. They included Adidas bags, Princess Anne, Amin, boat people, Bay City Rollers, colour television, digital watches, fast food, gay lib, high-tech, hang-gliding, Patty Hearst, jogging, Muppets, platform shoes, Angela Rippon, Johnny Rotten, skateboards, streakers, skinheads, Watergate and women's lib.

becades come in pairs: the hard-faced, political 1930s succeeded the frothy, escapist '20s; the good-time, whimsical '50s clambered back to affluence after the austere '40s. The 1970s, too, had a character contrapuntal to that of the '60s. If the 1960s were swinging, outlimistic, full of innovaswinging, optimistic, full of innova-tion, the '70s brought disenchantment, stagnation, a negative feeling, finally solar-heated houses. Bread crocks stagnation, a negative feeling, finally the baying, destructive anarchy of David Frost, a leader of 1960s satirists, had become a pouchy interviewer. The ex-satirist exchanged sycophantic chat with the ex-Shah of Iran and with ex-President Nixon. Jane Fonda began accepting her Oscars again. Dudley Moore, another '60s satirist, was assumed into Hollywood.

By the end of the 1970s, nostalgia was catching up with its own tail. Events respectable. There were few people still were being recycled as nostalgia almost capable of being shocked. Novel means ground had become a flyover.

The move away from urban culture, begun in the late 1960s, continued. Richard Adam's Watership Down (1972), an epic about bunny rabbits, and The Country Diary of an Edwardian Lady (1977) were both, to the surprise of the many publishers who had rejected them, runaway bestsellers. In the catalogue to the exhibition Homespun to High Speed held at Sheffield Art Galleries in 1979, Fiona MacCarthy wrote: "The new idealism of the 1970s, like the old idealism of the Arts and Crafts movement of the 1880s onwards, was an anti-urban movement. Vernacular idylic was punk.

If one is looking for an aliterative sobriquet for the 1970s, "the cynical 70s" probably comes closest to the control of the control o

But other progressives were more attracted by high-tech - the use of of which the architectural equivalent same ethos as Concorde, the highspeed train, micro-chips, television video games and shiny plastic clothes.

But something else entered 1970s design which was neither rural nor high-tech, but a calculated insult to both: kitisch, deliberate bad taste, Gilo Dorfles's book Kitsch (1969) appeared in English in 1970 in what Hugh Honour described in a review as an only too suitably bad translation.

Jacques Sternberg's Kusch was published by Academy Editions, London, in 1972. Biba, which opened in the old Kensington store Derry & Toms in taming. The stage punks swore and 1973 contained a "Kitch" (sic) room, spat and puked. The street punks which sold filled plastic boxes, mortified their flesh with safety-pins.

urinating cupids who performed when you warmed a glass builb.

It is possible that the new popularity of kitsch represented boredom with the po-faced worthiness of modern movement design which had managed to survive all the novelties and freaks of the 1960s and was still being sold by firms such as Habitat and Heal's: scrubbed pinewood cots, glass-topped coffee tables on square legs, leather cushions in tubular steel frames. The embracing of kitsch was a snook-cocking at the design establishment. It prepared the way for a clearing of the Revolutions are seldom achieved case of design this does not usually mean blood-letting, some kind of iennitive assault on estadusneo va had to precede the regeneration of design and the decorative arts. That assault came from punk, the most original and influential stylistic development of the '70s. Here for the first time was a popular movement which was too hot for commerce to handle.

EMI gave the Sex Pistols, headed by Johnny Rotten, a contract - but were forced to cancel it, with a big payoff for the Pistols, because of the damage to its corporate identity by the Sex Pistols ontrageous behaviour on and off stage. This was a tiger not for wore extraordinary uniforms hobbled' with straps and slashed with zippockets; and shaved and dyed their hair into Mohican styles.

Punk combined violence and kitsch. The intelligentsia of the young generation had already had their baptism of brutality in the Paris May revolution of 1968, which had precipitated its own superb art form, the silkscreened and lithographed posters by which, as Jean Casson wrote, the walls of Paris were "magnificently profaned". Now it was the turn of the non-university youth. In 1979 the punk rock star Sid Vicious died from an overdose of heroin in Greenwich Village, New York, while out on $50,000 bail after being accused of murdering his American giriment wancy spender in October 1978. A film giorifying him was made; and the front page of The Sun of February 3, 1979, headlining his death, is still being printed on tee-shirts four years later. If the psychedelic style of the 1960s was an adaptation of Art Nouveau, the basis of punk is to be found in the 1950s - in the hard rock style, in the spatterings of Jackson Pollock, in the leopardskin patterns of stariets' coats and Lady Docker's car seats and in the elliptical frames of Holiday Inn signs.

The Evening Standard on August 19, 1977 used the funeral of Elvis Presley as a chance to rail against punk:
"Presley's death like his life is inevitably attended by much that is art can only beging ersatz and professionally staged — an taste — a shocking extravaganza of kitsch of every variety.

But there is no mistaking the real shock, bereavement and desolation on thousands of those faces pressed against the gates of his house and queuing for the memorial service. Will they cry like that for Johnny Rotten?"

made Sid Vicious into a punk icon. Above right: the magazine i-D represents punk at its most sophisticated.

Probably not; but perhaps there was something to be said for punk beyond the punks' own suggestion of a justified revenge on a society that had given them some short shrift. In the contribution I was asked to write for the Preston Polytechnic Seventies exhibition catalogue, I tried to say what that "something" was: "Many regard punk as an evil phenomenon, something which threatens the fragile hasis that old ladies get beaten up on tube trains, who can dissent from this But in the decorative arts. cannot help regarding it as something fresh and hopeful. Before a new order comes into being, the old one must be destroyed, and punk is nothing if not destructive. I grew up in decades, and in a section of society (the middlemiddle-class) where conformity reigned. When I walk along the King's Road, Chelsea, today and see that young people have had the sheer courage to turn themselves into walking works or art with pink and green hair and extraordinary trousers hobbled at the legs by staps; with weird tattoos on their hope for the arts. Good art can only begin with an act of bad

THE POP-UP WORLD OF JONATHAN

Just bow does this phenomenon Jonathan Miller work?

Come to that, how do pop-up books Why is it that, when we open a pop-up book, Jonathan Miller's fingers come writhing out at us, labelled "Jonathan Miller's fingers"?

How do we know that they aren't sea or a new kind of tea time biscuit?

And why are we asking all these questions? The technology of pop-up books goes back into the depth of history. The Romans into the depth of bistory. The Romans had books. They also had statues, some of them looking remarkably like Jonathan Miller. Their problem was how to combine the two, so that a wealthy Roman villa owner, living perhaps in Gaul but with a numbered account in Helvetia, could open a new coffee table volume and have the living features of Jonathan Miller, or just that year's Roman Emperor, spring out at him.

The Roman Empire never solved this problem and went bankrupt in the attempt in about AD600. At about the same time a small Saxon community in what we now call Germany was packing its bags prior to moving to Britain for a primitive timesharing experiment and labelling all the inhabitants so that they should not be mislaid on arrival. Their problem: what to label the miller.

"I know!" said someone. "Let's call him Miller!"

ow, 1,300 years later, everyone in our society can own their own surname except the very rich indeed, who can only afford titles, and technology has come so far that you can open an ordinary-looking book and find Jonathan Miller's nose popping out at

Why have we got noses? What would happen if we breathed in all the time and never breathed out?

Why isn't there a Sir Peter Hall pop-up? The secret, perhaps, lies in Jonathan Miller's

I will do just these 49 operas and then go back to life as an ordinary GP, with just one hand-held camera and a sound recordist. Who knows – perhaps one day Peter Hall will come in complaining of a numer roce?"

"Jan 20. Why have we got a nose? I mean, why not twoo noses? To suiff instered would be to give us directional location of the thing we were sniffing. On the other hand, a double nose would be very difficult to do in a pop-up book.

In 1973 the building that we now call Peter Jonathan Miller resigned the next day. He immediately set to work on his great opus, a pop-up history of the world with special reference to the spleen. The part of the appendix was played by Derck Jacobi and the part of the sexy shoulders by Helen Mirren: Jonathan Miller's ears were played by himself, and even The Lancet was moved to comment that Shakespeare himself would have approved. Shakespear's diaries, however, tell a different

Now, 380 years later, Jonathan Miller will be telling you in The Times next week how to make your own pop-up books, produce your own Shakespeare plays, and get those nasty stains off your doublet and hose. The week after that he will be going back to work as a male nurse. Don't forget — only in The Times the Pop-up Werld of Lorentees. The Times, the Pop-up World of Jonathan

CONCISE CROSSWORD

Pop goes a decade

Pop was the first "gallery" art form in which America led the world. It might have been named by an English critic. Lawrence Alloway, and pioneered by an English artist, Richard Hamilton, but America was where the raw materials of inspiration lay, Michelan-gelo found his in the sculpture of ancient Italy. In the early 1960s the pop artists found theirs in the junk culture of modern America. The true pop artists revelled in the commercial products they depicted - or they depicted traditional subjects in a commercial way. In 1970 Motif Editions, London issued a series of four posters by Michael English called "the Rubbish Prints". One was of a crumpled V-8 juice can; the others showed a ketchup bottle, a Coke bottle top, and a squeezed tube of SR toothpaste. Here, then, was a message of a message. The rubbish that did not get into architect-designed litter bins had its own intrinsic qualities. Pop had no ideals. It did not moralize.

The genesis of Cubism took place well before the First World War, but Cubism was not domesticated, was not absorbed into the decorative arts, until the 1920s. Similarly, pop art, which had its great age in the 1960s, only became ns great age in the 1900s, or design in the late 1960s. By the 1970s it was a major force in the decorative arts. It popularized the idea of "multiples" – not only the repetition of a single image many times in a single work, but also in posters which democratized the artist's original concept. And it affected furniture design, such as Rupert Oliver's spanner seat and nut table at the 1971 International Engineering Exhibition, moulded from high-density polymethane foam, or the American "spreadmobile" which gave a boy's bed the appearance of a sports car.

Cybernetics The exhibition Cybernetic Serendipity, organized by Jasia Reichardt at the Institute of Contemporary Arts, London, in 1968, showed some of the possibilities of a relationship between art and computers. Could they become more sophisticated than endearingly humanoid robots in a space movie? This 1968 ICA show suggested the possibility of computer-aided design. The graphic display terminal was a "powerful and compact information processor, tailored to communicate with the designer in the medium he best understands - visual images."

The V8 juice can: one of "The Rubbish Prints"

There was some direct spin-offs of the exhibition in art, notably a limited set of lithographs issued by Motif Editions, of images made by com-puters. People began to talk about computer graphics as though this was the way ahead for art, the Korean artist Nam June Paik boldly asserted that "the cathode ray will one day replace

 Nostalgia
The Art Nouveau revival was virtually over by 1970; but the Art Deco revival was moving into top gear. In 197 (a big Deco exhibition was staged at the Minneapolis Institute of Arts, Minne-sota. Films such as Bonnie and Clyde

(1967), the shamelessly nostalgic The Boyfriend (1971) starring Twiggy, The Sting (1973), Murder on the Orient Express (1974), The Great Gatsby and Julia (1977) also promulgated the style. Roy Lichtenstein made sculptures which were witty pastiches of 1930s cinema design. Art Deco prints were used on women's clothes and doublebreasted suits became fashionable for men again. In 1970, some London buildings of the 1914-39 period were at last given statutory protection, including four Underground stations. By 1975 the decorative arts of the 1940s and 50s were being revived. A further filling to 1950s revivalism was given in 1976 by a Victoria and Albert Museum exhibition celebrating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Festival of Britain. and the Royal Jubilee year, 1977, was also an encouragment to look back at the 50s. The stage and screen versions of Grease and the film That Il Be the Day, with Ringo Starr and David Essex. conveyed the pop attractions of the period to the generation born after 1955. The death of Elvis Presley in 1977 brought another surge of 50s nostalgia. The big anction rooms now accepted as saleable such "antiques" as jukeboxes and early electric watches.

Behind the zany public world of John Cleese lay a man engulfed by depression.
In a new book, he tells how he is learning to laugh again

How a Python shed his tortured skin

tons Cleese once said that Python humour was informed with goodwill and enjoyment of life. Ten years ago there was little joyful about his own life. Behind the screen antics and high jinks lay confusion about his marriage. Iension and depression, the also suffired recurring bouts of low grade fly, though three checkups gave him a clean bill of health. Perhaps the tauses were psychosomutic, suggested his GP.

It was the first step towards what itic, suggested his GP.

It was the first siep towards what Cleese calls. The Wonderful World of Shrinks and three and a half years of group therapy under Dr Robin Skynner and his wife Prue. leese describes the experience as the most interesting of his adult life and in 1981 three years after leaving the group, he suggested writing a book on the experience and the deas, attitudes and methods of modern group and family therapy. Skynner agreed and tomorrow sees the publication of their joint book, Families and How to Survive Them.

Written in dialogue form, it deals with problems of marriage, babies, toddlers, children and family relationships as well as authority and teenagers. It is non-technical. - a popular presentation, as Skynner puts it "Families" refers to both men's experiences, though Cleese doesn't wallow in the autobiographical. He wanted to share the half dozen chinks of light he glimpsed over the three and a half years, and indeed he himself appears in a very

He damands answers and forces Slynner to make himself clear, as the doctor recalls: "I couldn't get away with any jargon. He wouldn't let up and I began to realize that I didn't know what I was talking about and had to go back to first principles".

Cleese was an eminently suitable co-author: people could identify with him in the dialogues and not be afraid of the emotions they found mentioned, which corresponded with their own. point. They worked two years, point. They worked two years, taping conversations, then editing and distilling till it was quite clear. During the first year Cleese spent two days a week with Skynner in the doctor's kitchen slogging away at it. The second year he was making Private on Parade and The Meaning of life which put the ones on Life, which put the onus on

Before therapy, which he entered into "taking a deep breath and jumping in". Cleese had suffered from manic running around. "I had a lot of tension and was subcons-ciously keeping myself busy to avoid confronting certain emotions. I cut myself off from my emotions and also from people. With therapy the rate of change was very slow. I began by thinking what a tough bastard Skynner was. But it worked and was

"I felt emotions changing, fol-lowed by a few days feeling dreamy after heavy sessions. My brain was sort of rewiring and I needed a notice up saying Closed till Tuesday for alterations. Before, everything went through my brain like the Indian saying: "the mind chatters like a drunken monkey: I had to ask myself whether I was depressed - I couldn't just feel it."

Cleese flatly refuses to say what caused the depressions - only that it went back to his childhood. Indeed the book itself shows how childhood experience affects behaviour in the rest of our life, and, Skynner added, how we can change it if we want to.

How did it change his views? "I had deeply engrained attitudes about how couples should be together and have a kind of mutual dependence. This was very much Cynthia But before I thought be brought into question and then after firm was wrong Now Te a long period of time. can be very independent of each other."

The realization did not save his marriage to Connie Booth - he stresses that that hadn't been the object of going into therapy in the first place - but other revelations on the nature of paranoia and putting blame for all mistakes on others helped avoid recriminations and bitterness after the break-up. Now their relationship is "very friendly-and cooperative" as far as their 12-year-old daughter, Cynthia. concerned.

When the "Plant a Tree in '73"

So easy to stop the Labour levy

Public expressions of guilt by trade union officials are rare. It is no coincidence that they occur tomorrow, just as the TUC is to meet Mr Norman Tebbit to discuss the political levy. Trade union officials are almost excessively prepared to confess that they have been mishandling the levy.

Since 1947, union members in England, Scotland and Wales have had to opt out rather than opt in to a paying political levy to the Labour Party. Now Mr. Tebbit is considering changing the law and he is examining acting. against employers who deduct the political levy from unionists' pay packets. Trade union leaders are preparing a fresh approach to Mr Tebbit. "We have sinned in the past will be the gambit. "We have not always been as efficient as we should in showing workers that they have a right to opt out. Give us a chance and we will improve. But don't legislate."

The present position of trade unionists on the political levy can be summed up by a survey carried out by National Opinion Polls for Aims of Industry. It showed that approximately 40 per cent of non-Labour voters pay the Labour levy ~ through ignorance, fear and apathy. Another 25 per cent don't know whether or not they pay it. A mere 24 per cent prefer the opting-out system.

Some trade unions, of course, are better than others in making it easy for their members to opt out, Mr Clive Jenkins' ASTMS allows 70 per cent to opt out - and deserves credit for it. But how do we account for the National Union of Dyers,

by Michael Ivens

Bleachers and Textile Workers getting 100 per cent of contributors to the political fund in 1979?

Or in 1981 the TGWU achieving 98 per cent, the NUR 97 per cent and Aslef 94 per cent? As Labour got less than half of the trade union vote, it hardly comes from political conviction!

There is a strong case, then, for changing from opting out to indicating positively your support for Labour by opting in. But Mr Tebbit would be mistaken if be thought that by changing the law mistaken if he thought that by changing the law in this way, he would stop the situation whereby non-Labour trade unionists find themselves being used as part of a block vote to elect Labour leaders and to create Labour policies.

These days many employers collect the union dues under so-called "sweatheart" agreement with unions. Very often the union will ask the employer to collect the political levy as well.

"But how do we know which employees have opted on!", will be the personnel officer's question. "Just collect the lot", is the common reply. And if the personnel man asks how the non-Labour supporters are to get their money back, the reply is often: "Just send them along to

How all this works in practice can be seen from the case of the brave Mr Jack Cleminson who year in, year out, asked the Post Office and Engineering Union for the political levy which the Post Office had knocked off his wages. Mr colleagues - and was threatened that he would lose his job by trade union representatives. Finally, after 12 years, Mr Cleminson took his case to the certification officer.

That gentleman produced a curious ruling. The union, he said, had to pay yearly in advance for the money deducted by the Post Office from Mr Cleminson's wages. Not surprisingly the ruling was overturned on appeal.

Trade unions and guilty employers sometimes argue that in these days of the computer, it is too expensive or difficult to take into account political levy exceptions. The opposite is the case. Computers are magnificently flexible and employers make all kinds of exceptions in pay, pensions, invoices, special rates and coun-

Many company chairmen are ignorant of the fact that many of their employees are being forced to pay the levy - even though they have opted out. They look rather pink when they discover it.

The solution is simple. The law should make it illegal for employers to deduct the levy if trade unionists have stated they do not want to pay it. And Mr Tebbit should deal with the loophole in the 1913 Act which allows the levy to be collected from everyone if discrimination presents severe difficulties. That clause is used as an excuse by employers and trade unions and should be

Poland's army: still no political retreat

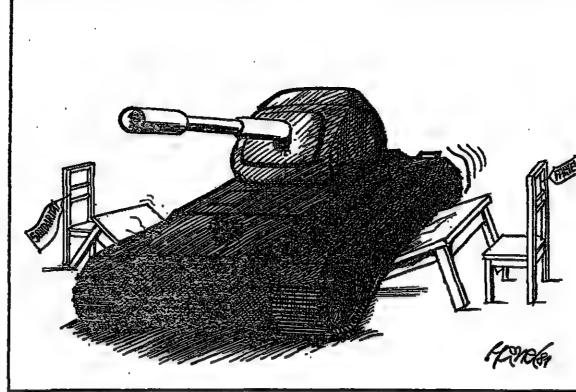

In the gloom and muggy warmth of a Warsaw underpass, near the flower-sellers and the wizened women offering strings of garlic, an accordion-wielding ex-soldier plays day in, day out an old partisan lament: "The willows weep, the girl friend cries, her eyes wet with tears they saw they have force." when she sees the hard, hard fate of the soldier. "The zloty notes accumulate in his old cloth cap, for the popular sentiment is strong. Even after 19 months of less-thanpleasant martial law, soldiers are an object of respect.

Very soon, probably in a matter of weeks, General Jaruzelski, the country's leader, is expected to resign as Minister of Defence, a post he has held for 15 years, thus yielding his direct control of an institution that evokes simple patriotic emotions but complex political thoughts. The declaration of martial law in December 1981, the creation of a ruling military council, the soldiers on the streets, the armoured personnel carriers, these seemed at the time like the trappings of a coup d'ctat, a seizure of power. In fact, it rapidly emerged that the army was being used as a mechanism of change from one discredited governing team another that had at least the authority to carry out its decisions. Thousands of party apparatchiks were dislodged. The role of the army was to control the pace of change so that it would not seem threatening, to ensure that the direction of those changes did not undermine the Communist Party even further and to lend authority - without physical-ly participating - to the efforts of the nternal security forces in stamping out the Solidarity opposition. For the army to have achieved these umpopular tasks without forfeiting popularity showed great political

But now two months have gone by since the lifting of martial law and it is becoming clear that the army is not just an instrument of transition. It has fulfilled its national task, but not its party political one. Although General Jaruzelski declared that the army would now withdraw to the "second line", senior officers are well entrenched in the party and the state administrations. This raises some important questions about the significance of armies in communist societies. when does an army's professional commitment to national security become a commitment to national "salvation"? When is it legitimate for an army to intervene politically and when should this intervention end? Does the army have a responsibility to reform or to preserve the status quo?

In the Soviet Union, where the authority of the party and its institution goes unquestioned (the questioners ar in jail), the support of the army is needed to carry off a change in leadership, but its own political involvement is limited; rather, it is a lobby whose loyalty has to be bought. But in countries where the authority of the party has been eroded and the machinery of change has grown rusty - in Ceausescu's Romania for example - the army may have a key role to play.

In Poland, the army has always had a national mission. It is the guardian of the frontiers and it serves, when it is functioning correctly, as a school for patriotism. On army intiative, monuments have been erected to pre-war, pre-communist generals; the military four-cornered hat, the traditional headwear of Polish armies, has been reintroduced for ceremonial occasions. These are the symbols which bind army with nation.

But the army also has a mission to the Communist Party. This creates a dilemma for thinking generals: what if the Party is not serving the nation effectively? Should the army stand idly by? Martial law showed that the generals are willing to gamble much to reconcile their two personae. The army is not something separate from the Communist Party. Most officers above the rank of captain are Party members. The head of military training, General Tadeusz Tup-czapski, recently remarked: "Every soldier should be a Marxist - and now every soldier should be an economic and social activistcommissars should .. former permanent contact at offices or factories where they have worked"

This then is the new military role in Poland: the soldier is a political activist, for only the army can boast the monolithic party structure that should (in the ideal Marxist world) be the case throughout Polish political society. That means that regenerate socialism in Poland by restoring effective government. Sitting at their desks, unflurried by the ending of martial law, three generals hold down crucial ministerial posts - the Interior Ministry (Czeslaw Kiszczak), Local Administration (Wiodzimierz Oliwa) and Mining (Czeslaw Piotrowski). Several generals are also deputy ministers, including the deputy minister of education. The head of the anti-corruption unit is General Tadeusz Hupalowski. Army officers serve as provincial governors in three Baltic ports (including Gdansk). In Silesia (Katowice), in central Poland (in four towns), as mayor of Warsaw, as first party secretary of Poznan, as chairmen of

And, perhaps even most important, army officers control two of the most decisive sections of the Communist Party central committee the personnel department and international relations. About 15 per cent of the party administration is believed to be run by officers.

but it should make it more effective. The problems are large, but they lurk, like icebergs, scarcely visible on the surface. First, the army by politicizing itself is risking not only an ultimate loss of prestige but also the reproduction of party factionalism that plagues the party at large. It is only natural that the general running the administration of a central Polish town will disagree Gdansk when it comes to the allocation of scarce funds. It is only natural that, confronted with political realities, some officers wil become enamoured of reform while others will be convinced of its

The officers involved in running the country at the moment are mainly from a political background - invariably Soviet-trained at staff college level -and are not really needed back at the barracks. But if the Warsaw Pact is to make credible its threat to reply to new US missiles with appropriate military measures, then it must demonstrate that its warlords are not entirely desk-bound.

hopelessness. These differences are not fatal, but they will undermine the political homogeneity that allowed the army to declare martial law in the first place.

Second, the church is resisting the idea that the army should become a kind of Marxist finishing school and has instructed priests to strengthen their links with conscripts. Finally, the pull of the Polish Army's other mission - to defend the country against outside attack - will become stronger, especially if the West stations new missiles in Europe.

had been bought by a Japanese camera company. The belated public sportsmanship being exhibited by the slick, socially exclusive New York Yacht Club, as it handed over for the first time in 132 years the covered America's Cup to ccstatic Australians at a Bellevue Avenue mansion, was in severe contrast to its private, even resentful. anguish.

When Australia II, with its remarkable fin-keel by an untutored designer. Ben Lexcen, came from a minute behind over the final two legs of the seventh and decisive race to win by 41 seconds, the men in peaked caps, blue blazers and white slacks lining the deck of the blackhulled committee boat Black Night knew they were watching the most treasured bauble in the sporting world vanish before their eyes. Their raison d'être had vanished.

As Alan Bond's wildly rejoicing crew sailed past, the Black Knight gun which had signalled the finish of the race then fired a four-salvo salute while the members doffed their hats and bowed in acknowledgement to a beautiful, innovative boat and the crew which so nearly failed her. Their fists were no doubt clenched at losing a lead of three races to one, never mind that unbelievable switch on the fifth leg. when Dennis Conner's 57-second advantage evaporated in a mistaken downwind course.

When Conner, the 1980 champion in Freedom against Bond's third boat, Australia I, achieved that 3-1 lead, the crackling shortwave radios out on Rhode Island Sound picked up the talk between NYYC Commodores Robert Stone and Bob McCullongh, and their belmsman. 'You sailed a terrific race," said the men from the club "Thank you, sir," replied Conner suffly that day: Conner the unbeatable, who was in a seemingly impregnable position against the boat he knew was faster, but whose crew could not collectively match his vast professional experience. Yet on Monday night, when what the NYCC members had believed to be impossible had actually happened, it was Conner who had to shoulder the burden of America's loss.

As Australia II came late into harbour against the faint remains of a crimson evening sky, the night was a blur of fireworks and rockets and blinking helicopters. The dockside groaning under the weight of thousands of spectators whom Newport may never see again. Television lights flooded the quay. the US syndicate boats Liberty and Freedom formed a guard of honour, for Australia II.

There on her towing launch, Black Swan, was the red-jacketed Conner, with a fixed, empty good loser's smile gazing up at the myriad of frenzied Australian faces. How different it had been a few hours before as the tanned Conner, looking like Al Jolson with his sun-creamed white lips, had confidently jockeyed his burgandy-coloured boat in the pre-start manoeuvres. Now it was Conner, unaccompanied by any member of the NYYC, who walked alone through the car park, through the milling streets of hard-luck cries to the Armoury, where he faced the press, knowing he had blown a winning position.

I'd like to stay for an hour of questions", he said when paying tribute to Australia II. But when a mass of camera, television and press men is witnessing a man with tears swelling his eyes as he says the United States has no cause to be ashamed of their performance, they do not press him with questions. They just let him put on his straw hat, accept a thin cheer, and disappear back into the bedlam

The NYYC might have supported the man who surrendered its heritage, but seemingly did not have the guts. It was left to syndicate chairman Ed du Moulin to appear later and say Conner was still the best helmsman. But the truth was he just did not have the best boat, and after months of relentless pressure. the man who never allowed a mistake had made a monumental

Back in New York, where the club was formed in 1844, and settled into its present mansion in 1901, those members not in Newport had been listening to a radio commentary in and portraits of boats and skippers of long ago. The club has no television it is that kind of club. No one knows what they thought as Liberty's lead disappeared by the start of the final leg.

Richard Thursby, a NYYC member, has said: "There won't be more than a couple of days mourning before we start thinking about how to win the damned thing back." But now it is free to any club and syndicate in the US, never mind the rest of the world, to bid independently. The exclusiveness which the NYYC enjoyed for so long finally turned against it. Never was a US 12-metre permitted to compete against a foreign boat outside the America's Cup; so they never knew, for example, what all the six foreign challengers learnt: that Australia II's tall, slim rudder was also part of her tacking ability, and they copied it.

When Conner finally sot into the water against Lexcen's Lightning, as it is known, he was raw to the exceptional qualities which Victory 83 and the others had long since discovered. Ultimately, by the narrowest but for all that colossal margin, the man who gave every command on his boat, made the singular error which neutralized the earlier ones by Bertrand. It was the right result.

Here's health, the French way

Eighteen months ago I had to go into hospital for a minor operation. First was inspected by a consultant who discussed the nature of my responsibilities at the Treasury and then handed me over to two young housemen. One examined me; the other took notes. Eventually the consultant returned, listened grave-ly, and confirmed that the operation was required. I went into hospital - as an NHS patient. I hastily add - for three days. The treatment was excellent, and entirely successful. My room was swept and garnished about half a dozen times a day; and at any time of the day, there seemed to be a squad of half a dozen nurses sitting around with nothing very obvious to

So I find it difficult to swallow the reports of the desecration being perpetrated on the NHS by flinthearted Norman Fowler.

Certainly cuts such as the closure of 20 per cent of the beds of the Department of Paediatrics at Guy's should be avoided, but such issues skirt the problem of over-manning in the Health Service. Between 1979 and 1982, the DHSS recently told us, the number of doctors and dentists on its payroll rose by more than 2,000, or 6 per cent. The number of nurses and midwives rose by 40,000, almost 11 per cent. "Administrative and clerical staff" increased by almost 6,000 and "professional and technical" by 7,000 - all of 12 per cent.

In total, the NHS payroll grew by 55,000. Yet hospital waiting lists have not noticeably shortened, nor has there been any noticeable increase in the number of patients treated. Is it really the case that 8,000 out of a total of 800,000 - just one for every extra seven recruited between 1979 and 1982 - cannot be found who are surplus to require-

It is true that an aging population and a longer life expectancy make extra demands on the NHS. It is also true that more people are needed, from GPs to cleaners, to provide the same level of service as the hours of work have shrunk. But to accuse a government which has doubled cash expenditure on health care and consciously increased the proportion of the nation's product going to the NHS of a "conspiracy" to force people to use private medicine is to debase the English language. On the other hand, I can see nothing remotely improper about the contemplation and discussion of long-term changes in the way we pay for health. If the NHS ever was the envy of the world — which I doubt it certainly isn't now. We should not be inhibited from learning from the experience of our neighbours.

I have never been convinced by the arguments of those who would have us follow the US example and rely on private medical insurance with a safety-net. The evidence of the capacity of the medical and legal professions to rip off such a system is really too impressive to be dismissed. Only last week an American acquaintance who could not remotely be accused of enthus asm for "socialized medicine" told me of a friend who had received a $500,000 bill for the treatment of his wife, who had just died of cancer. Allow a multiple of five for poetic exaggeration and the cost would suff be indefensible.

But the American system is no the only alternative. In France, health care is finance from compulsory insurance and topped up from taxes, much as it is in Britain, But with a crucial differ-

Instead of the service being either free at point of use, or subject to charges (for prescriptions, dental care, etc) unrelated to costs, as it is on this side of the Channel, the user is billed and has to pay and subsequently reclaims.

There are plenty of pitfalks administrative costs are higher since the sheep who can be expected to meet the initial charge until they can reclaim it have to be sorted from the goats who cannot. But the introduction of a comprehensive cash nexus induces both a consciousness of cost and a propensity to shop around for best value -sometting which is almost wholly absent from our system.

At any rate, we should not be browbeaten into assuming that all the NHS needs is more cash. Still less should we treat pressures for marginal economies in manpower as evidence of a betrayal of commitments to the NHS.

Puppet state and a Westminster MP

Sir Peter Emery, MP for Honiton, who was knighted for distinguished political services last year, has pursued a career not entirely free of controversy. He was in effect rapped over the knuckles by the House of Commons Public Accounts Com-80 for being a director of a company that made an excessive profit from managing the publicly funded Underwater Training Centre in Scotland. But Sir Peter Emery vehemently denies the allegation that his company made too much money out of the taxpayer (even after the committee reinvestigated the matter at his request and again found against him).

There is nothing particularly unusual in MPs having business interests and nothing particularly unusual about work in public relations. Many MPs relate, promote, advertise and oil wheels. But Sir Peter Emery's latest form of political entrepeneurship requires examination. His company, Shenley Trust Services, is acting as a public relations agency for Bophuthatswa-na, a so-called independent black state in South Africa Sir Peter has himself been introducing people from Bophuthatswana to influential politicians and diplomats. Bophuthatswana House, the country's official residence which opened with a great fanfare last year in Holland Park, is owned by a company with a registered address at Sir Peter Emery's Sackville Street offices.

At first sight, Bophuthatswana would seem a laudable as well as a profitable cause to promote. Its record on human rights, unlike that of the other Bantustans, is good. Its government was democratically elected, albeit on a registered franchise of about 270,000 in a country that is officially the homeland of 2,700,000 people. Its 102-seat national assembly has only a minority of seats reserved for nominated chiefs.

But Bophuthatswana, like the other Bantustans, is the means by which the South African government legitimates white dominion. The African majority is denied political, property and full residential rights on the grounds that it belongs to Bantustans, even though many have never set foot in them. By this simple legal fiction, blacks accounting for 73 per cent of the population are excluded from ownership of 86 per cent of the land in South Africa, incorporating virtually all parts of the country which have mineral resources, good farming land or expensive economic activity. Black Africans are also denied the right to vote in elections for the South African government or even to belong to a political party which has white members, since their political aspirations should be confined officially to their black policy.

'homelands' Yet the Bantustans are transparently bogus even as would-be independent states. Bophuthatswana, for instance, is not even a single territorial enclave within South Africa, but consists of seven parcels of land, separated in some cases by hundreds of miles. Its government is financially and militarily dependent on Pretoria, and 55 per cent of its labour force works in what are officially white areas.

Like other homelands, Bophuthatswana is an impoverished reservation, providing cheap labour for white-controlled industry and a aged and sick who are not wanted in "white" South Africa. Its very existence, with that of the other Bantustans, constitutes a cover form of social control. About four million black workers, with migrant status in South Africa, are under constant threat of being forcibly repatriated to their "homelands" if they tangle with the authorities of with employers.

The Bantustans are also a crucial part of the South African government's future programme for gaining international acceptance. The intention is to create 10 independent black states which will eventually enter into a confederation with white" South Africa in what Prime Minister P. W. Botha calls "an association of free states". Racist segregation in one society that appears offensive to the outside world will, it is hoped, seem more palatable in the form of a pluralist development of separate nations. And by enlisting black elite in running the Bantustans, the South African government hopes to ensure that resistance to white dominion will develop in the form of a strugge between blacks,

But the development of pseudoindependent Bantustans represents only a face-lift to a system of exploitation based on racist eugenic theories. Most of the resources of a mineral-rich country will continue to be appropriated by a white minority through the ruse of making the majority aliens in their own land. This is why Britain, the EEC. and the entire civilized world have refused to recognize any of the four Bantustans so far declared to be independent states.

But if South Africa is to achieve 2 diplomatic breakthrough in the future, Britain is the one country in which the process could begin Britain has the most right with government in the EEC in terms of its international policy. THE REAGAN OFFER

Should President Reagan be rude to the Russians if he is genuinely seeking an agreement on arms control? In his address to the United Nations General Assembly on Monday he made important concessions in an effort to break the stalemate at the Geneva talks on Intermediate Nuclear Forces (INF), but also questioned Soviet good faith and criticized the record of the USSR in international affairs. The initial response from Moscow does not augur well for progress at Geneva; Tass counterattacked by accusing Mr Reagan of using "gross distor-tions of generally known facts, demagoguery, disinformation, and blatant lies."

Yet the balance of his speech was about right. The proposals on arms control were revealed to Soviet negotiators at Geneva the previous week, rather than first announced on a public occasion for maximum propaganda advantage, as had been President Andropov's practice. The criticisms of the USSR were relatively muted, and were certainly just. Unlike the Soviet leader, President Reagan has to take account of public opinion in the Nato democracies, and explain why it is so difficult to achieve arms limitations clearly of ben-efit to the whole world.

President Reagan has made three proposals which go some way to meeting Soviet demands at the INF talks. First, the US would not seek to match in western Europe the total number of warheads deployed by the USSR in its European and Asian territories, but would maintain tioned in the USA with shorter equal numbers on a global basis, range than Soviet bombers level lower than the numbers of land-based weapons of intermediate range now possessed by the USSR.

This would mean that Moscow would reduce the warheads targeted on western Europe while fewer US weapons would be required when deployment of стиіse and Pershing II missiles begins in December, Mr Caspar Weinberger, has the opportunity during his visit to China to explain the thinking behind the new proposals to his hosts who, faced with 108 of the triple warhead SS20 missiles across their northern border, clearly prefer the destruction of the Soviet weapons envisaged in President Reagan's initial "zero option". For China and Japan, an arms limitation which leaves these Soviet weapons on site in these Soviet weapons on site in Asia cannot be safisfactory, and since they are highly mobile and could be redeployed to threaten Western Europe, it is certainly vital that Washington retains the right to deploy "elsewhere" the missiles within the global balance not within the global balance not deployed in Europe.

The second concession agreeing to include medium range bomber forces - will greatly complicate the work of the INF negotiators, but has long been demanded by Moscow which claims that when aircraft are included a balance already exists without the cruise and Pershing II missiles. This is based on a distortion of the figures, however, which brings in British and French deterrents and even includes aircraft sta-thus achieving a balance at a excluded from Moscow's calculations. Counting all medium range weapons and aircraft, the Warsaw Pact forces actually have four times the Nato figures.

THE THE PERSON OF THE PERSON O

The third proposal should certainly be welcomed by Mos-cow, since it allows for the reduction of Pershing II numbers to preserve the one-to-five ratio with cruise missiles should an agreement to lower the overall balance be achieved. The faster Pershings are regarded by USSR as the greater threat, taking only eight minutes from their West German bases to reach targets in the USSR,

There is enough evidence of flexibility and compromise in these proposals to encourage a more constructive Soviet stance at Geneva, But President Reagan correctly emphasized the necessity of effective verification and pointed out the need for the USSR to improve its very suspect record in observing the international agreements al-ready negotiated such as the Helsinki Final Act, the Conven-tion on Biological Weapons, and earlier arms limitation treaties. He was not being rude to the Russians in saying that the tragedy of the Korean airliner showed how different is the Kremlin's attitude to truth and international cooperation. This is an unfortunate fact of life which the western public must bear in mind when demanding progress at Geneva. President Reagan's proposals, together with the imminent deployment of cruise and Pershing II missiles, place the onus firmly on the Soviet leaders to show a similar

Their escape may not do much directly to reinforce the IRA's ability to sustain the commission of crimes that it calls war.

However that may be, there is no mistaking the political significance of the escape. It was one of those deeds of daring that are the very stuff of the Irish republican tradition of armed resistance. The Provos triumphantly cry "Colditz", and they must be allowed the comparison. It is the perfect propaganda antidote to he procession of informers that have shaken the organization's morale. It is deeply disheartening to the security forces in Northern Ireland, especially the units which laboured to bring these men to justice in the first place. It does not leave unscathed those who carry political responsibility in the province.

From the point of view of authority the misadventure is so gross and notorious as to bring up the question of political resignation, the demand for which has been heard both in land. This is not the culmijudice" interlude supervenes. Is that enough to be going on with?

Political resignations, the kind in which the victim jumps and is not just pushed, can serve a useful purpose. Sometimes, as in the government's collective fault; to draw a line of some sort under the past in order to enable the government better to tackle the urgency of the present. Sometimes, as in the case of Sir Thomas Dugdale and Crichel Down, the purpose is more personal: resignation is the signal that the minister assumes responsibility for the misdeeds of his officials, even if they are of a kind for which personal supervision would not be expected of him; it is a signal that the ranks Scott, the junior minister with of politicians contain honourable men.

This is not the occasion for a Carrington type of resignation. The Government's general ability to manage the affairs of Northern Ireland is not seriously impaired by the incident (and if the Provos were handed the political scalp of a Secretary of State they would have even and not simply one of his more to crow about). Moreover the setback occurs in the field of internal security, where there has been steady and marked improvement under the present administration in Northern Ire-pation of a record of failure, but a sudden and spectacular reverse in an area where things were going fairly well.

willingness to reach agreement.

The time for a Dugdale type of resignation will come, if at when Sir James Hennessy has made his report. It may then be possible to see how far the disaster was due to the negligence or criminality of individuals, and how far to errors of policy or laxity in their execution. In measuring the obligations of political honour against those conclussion it will be fair to remember Whitehall in conditions of external peace and civil har-mony. The inveterate and bloodstained enemies of the state who are active in Northern Ireland have the power to inflict occasional spectacular coups de main in the face even of vigilance.

The name of Mr Nicholas responsibility for prisons, is the one to which a call for resignation is being pinned, not solely for reasons that have to do with security in Northern Ireland. If this were a resigning matter - and it is our view that it is not, subject to the finding of the inquiry - it would implicate the Secretary of State parliamentary under-secretaries. The political administration at Stormont is compact. Security policy is at the heart of it, and the Maze is near the heart of security policy. Responsibility goes right to the top.

SAILING, SAILING

Much of the fascination of the sufficient should not stifle praise America's Cup has derived from the stubborn brilliance with which the Americans defended it for 132 years. The desire to be the first to break the spell brought rich men, superb yachts and the world's best helmsmen to Newport time after time. One by one they lost, and each time they did so the fascination grew.

Now the Australians have won at last, after many attempts, and the spell is broken. Skilled sailors though they are, they won primarily on the drawing board and in the Dutch testing tank, for they had a markedly faster boat. The Americans, who probably had the edge as sailors, were outdesigned rather than out-sailed, and they nearly won the last

The Australians' secret lay not just in the mysterious winged keel but in the whole design around it which enabled them to make a light boat without loss of stability. Their victory is no less praiseworthy for that. The complex formula of the twelve-metre class challenges the designer as much as the helmsman. The years. Yet something will surely Australians took up the challenge and simply did a better job than anyone else. They well deserve their victory; the Americans were somewhat illmannered to object as vociferously as they did. for the Australians.

Of the Americans' behaviour it can perhaps be said in mitigation that as a nation they would not be where they are in the world today if they did not attach so much importance to winning. But this will make the loss even harder for them. In the way that symbolism sometimes becomes attached to matters of only marginal relevance, Americans may see the loss of the cup as further confirmation of their fears that they are losing their ability to hold the outer frontiers of technological innovation. Some may even see it as part of a wider loss of predominance.

Doubtless the Americans will fight back. They will fight on the computers and the drawing boards. They will fight in the testing tanks and finally on the water. But will other nations Cup fight too? one purpose that they are virtually useless for anything else unless extensively modified. The races themselves are strange, lonely elegant duels between two yachts only, far out to sea, as distant from the multiple skirmishing of most yacht racing as is a modern lightweight ascent of Everest from a crowded athletics meeting.

And the sport is very much in tune with the age. It involves modern technology, yet it produces no pollution and little noise (the spectator fleet is another matter, of course). It does no damage. It requires no mastery of nature but subtle and sensitive exploration of how to extract the most power from wind and water. The best helmsmen are those who can find and hold that thin line of balance along which the elements seem to join in driving the boat forward. The America's Cup will continue to represent one of the highest tests of their Sound money and sound economies cannot be achieved by arbitrary actions. It is little wonder that the United Kingdom has a deficit on trade in manufactures when this new phase of money madness is closing the markets of developing countries.

New initiatives are urgently required from this side of the Atlantic, from the United Kingdom as a banking and industrial nation. It is in the interests of all that we get our act together and overcome organisational problems that have left the world with too many idle hands and minds and too much poverty.

Yours faithfully, WILLIAM LITHGOW, P O Box 2, Port Glasgow, Renfrewshire. September 26.

Rates reform

From the Chief Executive of Swale Borough Council

Sir, The Government invites views on its White Paper on rates. May I, from the inside, add to the admirable comments of your leading article of September 16 and hope to dispel a number of deeply seated misconceptions?

The White Paper starts from the mischievous and misleading premise that "the Government cannot ignore the deep and widespread sense of grievance felt by rate-payers". Having itself failed to reform the rating system the Government then orchestrated a campaign against those who have to operate the present outdated system with the intention of undermining public confidence in local govern-ment so as to pick it off like a ripe

The Government claims credit for seeking "to reverse the growth in current expenditure" by "increasing the accountability of local auth-orities". Accountability is measured locally in votes and expenditure in "needs". Local government does not require a sermon on that. We provide vastly more information on our functions than does central government. It is they, not we, who so frequently shelter behind the phrase "not in the public interest". All Cabinet papers are secret; all ours are open. Open government? Accountability? I ask you!

The Government go on to claim they were fully prepared to propose to Parliament the abolition of domestic rates if consultation had revealed broad-based support..."
Humbug! If we have to wait for a consensus on such an important matter we are entitled to ask,

"Where has leadership gone?"
And what about industrial rates anyway? Local income tax would be an entirely viable alternative to rates, needing only a computer and a programme for its introduction. Doesn't the Government have any computers? We do.

The White Paper simply will not do. it is the Government's job democratically to reform the 200year-old rating system. It is not their job autocratically to substitute their judgment for that of locally ealected councillors.

Yours faithfully, HARRY WHITE, Chief Executive, Swale Borough Council, Council Offices, Central Avenue Sittingbourne, Kent. September 21.

Worker consultation

From the General Secretary of the International Metalworkers' Federation.

Sir, I suppose it was a coincidence that, immediately preceding a report from 17 leading chairmen of European companies expressing justified concern about the gradual disintegration of the EEC (page 15, September 13), was a letter (page 13) from a British Conservative Euro MP arming that what has happened MP arguing that what has happened to the EEC Vredeling directive over providing information to workers is a good thing.

To recall the arguments over the Vredeling directive, which was aimed at providing employees with increased information rights, would be tedious, but no one will deny that the combination of American and European multinational lobbying power, aided by right-wing Euro MPs such as Mr Spencer, has completely emasculated the original Vredeling proposal.

Now I happen to agree with the worries of Mr Pehr Gyllenhammar, the chairman of Volvo, about the future disintegration of the EEC and the need for urgent steps to reverse this process. But while the European institutions, under unremitting pressure from business interests, do all in their power to scupper initiatives aimed at social progress and ignore calls for action to combat unemployment and scorn efforts at making multinational companies operate under the same rules as national companies, who can blame the mass of West Europe's popu-lation, those in and out of work and their families, if they profess no interest in the future of the EEC?

The chairmen of ICI, Shell, Philips, Flat and so on might ask Europe is one which serves only the immediate profitability of their individual companies. If that is the case, and I fear on the evidence of their lobbying over Vredeling it is, then their noble words about European unity will always be confounded by their shortsighted actions. Sincerely yours

Action on abortion From Dr James Owen Drife

Sir, Ms Nankivell rightly points out (September 21) that the 28-week upper limit on legal termination of pregnancy is out of date and should he reduced, but her suggested limit of 14 weeks is based on a misunderstanding of amniocentesis that may have misled your readers.

Amniocentesis (drawing fluid from the womb) is done around the sixteenth week of pregnancy and is impossible at 12 weeks because the womb is too small. It is carried out to diagnose congenital abnormality, and with spina bifida an answer can be obtained within days of the test. However, in Down's syndrome and other chromosome abnormalities analysis of the fluid takes about three weeks and termination cannot be carried out until the twentieth week of pregnancy, even if no technical or administrative delays occur. Faster methods of making these diagnoses are being examined but are not vet reliable.

Age of the train

From Mr Alan Etherington Sir, As one of the earlier "Euston people" and also as one of the present "Liverpool Street people" referred to by Paul Jennings in his recent article, "A case of terminal ferrocundia" (September 10), I feel I must respond to some of the points he made. I write not as a victim of ferrocundia (the state of being ashamed of any suggestion of rail travel) but as an exponent of ferrogloria (the state of being proud of such a suggestion).

The great horizontal girders on the apparent Tower of Rabel to be seen today at Liverpool Street station are merely the means whereby major repairs are being carried out to the roof of the Western Train Shed, which is to be retained and restored to its original noble glory, with its unsurpassed height unbroken.

As to the new concourse, one will still enter it from various levels. There will be, as Paul Jennings hopes, "the mystery of glass and magical processions of people in space-filling counter-flow" and we shall certainly achieve at least some of the objectives in his final list.

However, we shall achieve no-thing without his "damned offices", for it is only by thus realising the value of our land asset that the necessary funds for the new station will ever be forthcoming. Yours faithfully, ALAN ETHERINGTON (Project Manager, Liverpool Street

Financing pensions in weak economy

From Mr Nigel Vinson and Mr benefit would come from people Philip Chappell closely relating to the wealth

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

AND THE PARTY OF T

Sir, Lord Byers (September 17) by implication criticises our proposals to give the option for personal and portable pensions - as the selfemployed now have - to all.

We share his concern to protect what has been done for the welfare of pensioners, but it is indeed the very scale of the success of the measures for which Lord Byers was in part responsible that leads us to the present dilemma – the core issue of how to finance marginar in analysis. of how to finance pensions in a weak economy with a growing demographic imbalance.

We do not suggest for one moment that existing pension arrangements have come about for anything but the best possible motives, and for some people these arrangements have proved highly satisfactory. However, for many more who, either optionally or through no fault of their own, have to change jobs the present arrangements are inequitable.

Our proposals did not start from trying to resolve the balance between leavers and stayers but rather because we perceived the lack of personal identification and involvement by the member in the wealth represented by the £120bn of pension fund assets. It happens to be a most timely and beneficial by-product of our proposals that they would, over a period, also solve the early leaver problem. Unless we begin soon to make a progressive and gradual shift in the property rights to the capital represented by pension funds we shall finish, in as little as 20 years, with a society where virtually everything is owned by the insti-

History shows that this is undesirable, and unnecessary, be-cause the alternative of personalising that wealth must be so much better for the employee, the com-

Trees and the landscape

From Dame Sylvia Crowe

Sir, Recent correspondence in your columns is a welcome proof of the current widespread concern for our landscape. This exchange of views is doubly encouraging because real and lasting gain to our environment can only be assured if there is dialogue and mutual understanding between all those concerned with the use of our land.

it industry, transport, housing, agriculture or forestry, and our country suffers today from many examples of this over-specialization. But Britain is also fortunate in having a rich legacy in both town and countryside where the prime land use has accommodated other values.

If eventually the rights of early leavers are made equal to those of long stayers then, in logic, if all are treated the same it would not be difficult to optionally administer each pension fund as a unit trust. This would bring all the motivational benefits of identification with that wealth - individuals are more likely to understand the process of wealth-creation if they own it. There is nothing mandatory about our proposals; we seek no U-turns but rather progressive voluntary changes within the pensions indus-try. We hope for minor regulatory alterations to enable ex-employees to transfer their preserved pensions into an approved personal scheme and, indeed, pension administrators should be grateful to get rid of the obligation to track down and pay snippets of monthly pension to ex-employees who left the company Overall, our proposals give the chance to be more fair to those who, in our increasingly labour mobile times, might wish to have the option - the freedom to choose - to take their pension with them, as the selfemployed can. What is more, they encourage the dissemination of ownership, that essential condition for a free and responsible society. Yours etc. NIGEL VINSON.

provide recreation. Reservoirs now not only supply our water, but are major wildfowl habitats and centres of recreation.

The wide advocacy of increased tree planting perhaps indicates that we are at last to reverse the centuries old deforestation of our land, but the most fruitful use of this renaissance requires careful thought, knowledge and imagination.

Large multi-purpose forests have their place, especially on our more degraded soils, but of even greater benefit to the land in general are the small woodlands and shelter belts in the countryside and, above all, the woodlands of our green belts and cities, giving untold pleasure to town dwellers and providing areas of great value in nature conservation.

Afforestation on derelict land is bringing new life and enjoyment to old industrial cities, such as Stokeon-Trent. Warrington and now Liverpool. Let us hope that the plans for redeveloping London's Dock-lands will also take the opportunity to include, for the pleasure of Londoners, a new forest and water landscape. Yours faithfully.

Church membership

From the Rev Brother Martin, SSF Sir, Mr P. A. Barter states, in his letter of September 17, that he is bewildered about declining member-ship of the Church of England, for he had previously understood that new translations of the Bible and modern services would attract more people into attending church.

He is, in fact, expressing a popular misconception, and one which has been repudiated several times by Canon R. C. D. Jasper, who was chairman of the commission which put the proposals before the General Synod which ultimately resulted in the publication of the Alternative

Yachting facilities

From Mr Anthony Short Sir, Mr Blackburn (September 21) misses the point of Mr Collard's letter (September 15). There is a severe lack of good moorings in Britain. The south coast is attracting many Continental sailors who appreciate our landscape and lifestyle.

Sailing in French waters with their massive tides one soon finds safe anchorages and non-drying moorings even in the smallest fishing villages, such as Granville, Perros or Lezardrieux. They offer greater safety, more flexibility in choice of passage, and increased tourist trade for the area.

Accidents abroad

From Mr Colin Trigger Sir, The Rev Dr Bray (September 21) is quite correct to emphasise the need for all holidaymakers to be adequately insured against acci-dents, medical expenses, etc. How-ever, it is difficult to imagine ABTA members being able to promote the value of such insurance in stronger terms than at present.

Every major tour operator offers in his brochure an inclusive, comprehensive policy with limits thought to be more than adequate for all contingencies. In addition, every retail travel agent is trained to recommend insurance to the client and indeed is able to offer a very attractive policy created to ABTA's own specifications. I understand that the majority of holidaymakers booking package holidays through ABTA members take out comprehensive insurance of one kind or another. Compulsory insurance is not a easible solution, for not only do we British value the right to make certain decisions for ourselves rather than to be obligated, but it is quite conceivable that the Office of Fair Trading would object to such a practice anyway.

Whilst accidents to holidaymak ers are always a matter for concern, it is reasonable to expect that individuals themselves will also take responsibility for their own safety and behaviour abroad. The re-sponsibility for offering satisfactory insurance is, in my opinion, quite adequately discharged today by the tour operator and/or travel agent involved, but I accept that those making their own arrangements are less likely to end up with the protection they deserve. Yours faithfully, or a person employed in that undertaking or part shall be deemed to have been done by or in relation one of Premier and Total was liable to pay the employees redundancy payments. The answer depended on to the transferee. (3) Any reference the effect of the 1981 Regulations. in paragraph (1) or (2) above to a person employed in an undertaking or part of one transferred by a relevant transfer is a reference to a Under the old law if an employer, transferred his business to person so employed immediately before the transfer..." The words "relevant transfer" are defined as

COLLIN TRIGGER, Chairman, Tour Operators' Council, Association of British Travel Agents, 55-57 Newman Street, W1.

A, transferred his business to another, B, the employee's contract of employment with A came to an end. Unless B agreed to employ the employee, A was liable to pay a redundancy payment. If B did take on the employee, A was not liable to make a redundancy payment and the employee was treated as having continuity of employment. Therefore under the old law it would have been Premier which would have been Premier which would have made the redundancy payments. The new Regulations were made to implement EEC Council Direc-tive No. 77/187. The general scheme of the Regulations was directly contrary to the pre-existing law. The general rule was that on the transfer of a business the employees Applying the Regulations to the present-case, the questions which arose were: (1) whether the transactions amounted to a transfer of a trade or business or only a transfer of assets; (2) whether the transfer was a 'relevant transfer' and if so (3) whether Total of the interim caretaker was to be treated as the transferee. The industrial tribunal had held that if there was a transfer at all, it was the business as a going concern and not merely assets which Regulations. In order to come within Regulation 5 (1) there had to be a relevant transfer and the employees had to have been employed by Premier immediately before the transfer.

The second requirement was clearly satisfied. As for the first requirement, if the case had been one in which Total was itself going dancy payments. The first consideration was whether there was a relevant transfer (and if so to whom) on the assumption that not only assets but the business itself was transferred to Total. Unless the case fell within

Regulation 5 (1) the employees' contracts were not affected by the

to carry on the business there would have been a relevant transfer within the meaning of regulation 3 (1). In the ordinary case the effect of the Regulations was that if a business was transferred, the employees were automatically transferred with it irrespective of the wishes of the transferee or of the employees. The employees' contractural and statutory rights became enforceable against the transferce, not the transferor. When, as in the present case, the transferee made it clear that it would not continue to employ the employees, it repudiated the continuing contract and con-structively dismissed the employees. The employees were redundant and became entitled to a redundancy payment from the transferee. A transferee of a business who did not wish to take over the employees of that business would still be liable to the employees for othe redundancy To protect itself, the transferce had to agree with the transferor either that the transferor would either that the transferor would dismiss the employee before the Chatham; Denton, Hall & Bugin.

were transferred. But the tribunat held that the transaction did not constitute a relevant transfer, and that Premier was liable to pay the liabilities.

The question was whether it made any difference that the transferee. Total, was not itself going to carry on the business but was immediately licensing to a third party the right to run the business. It was impossible to treat such a case without running contary to the scheme of the Regulations, namely, the automatic transfer of employment. The wishes and needs of the employment was transferred. The moment in time at which Total was the owner of the business before it could have granted the licence to the interim caretaker. The employees' contracts were therefore continued with Total for that short moment and were repudiated by Total, which made it clear that it was not going to employ them. When Total granted the licence, there was a second transfer of the business but as the employees were not employed by Tolal immediately before the second transfer, their contracts of employment were not transferred under Regulation 5 (i). The industrial tribunal's finding that there was a transfer of the business and not only a transfer of the assets by Premier to Total was a finding of fact and would be upheld. Accordingly there was a relevant transfer of an undertaking by Fremier to Total within Regulation 5 (i); there was no relevant transfer to the interim caretaker and Total was liable to make the redundancy payments to the employees. The appeal would be allowed and leave to appeal granted

SPECIAL REPORT

Hopes fly high as the big boys pull out

by Arthur Reed

Britain's regional airports, the traditional loss-makers of the domestic aviation business, look set for a better future as the pattern of air travel within the United Kingdom changes rad-

Two major trends are already having an impact. Deregulatory policies of this and the previous Conservative Governments have resulted in a new generation of small airlines springing up, prepared to operate commuter services to towns and cities where services to towns and cities where none existed before. These airlines are also filling the vacoum left by British Airways as it has withdrawn from unprofitable routes as part of its retrenchment programme.
Secondly, the two main Lon-to the subject of the London airports, whose superb technical facilities, and caviable range of air services to points throughout the world act as a magnet for passengers and freight from throughout the British Isles.

Regional managers see

don airports, Heathrow and Gatwick, continue to move steadily towards saturation, and as the commuter airlines find it increasingly difficult to obtain take-off and landing "slots", they are inevitably looking to the regions to speed their needs.

Stansted, promoted by both Government and the British Airports Authority as the third London airport, lies virtually empty as the decision of the planning inspector who conducted the 18-mouth inquiry into its future is awaited. The outcome is of vital interest to the regionals, for if a decision to develop it to take up to 15m passengers a year is made, their future growth could be stunted with such a large amount of additional capacity thrown onto the national market.

But if British Airways' hopes for a fifth terminal at Heathrow are realized, with some modest increase in capacity at Stansted, the scope for growth by the regional airports during the years to the end of the century should know no bounds.

Those who run the airports in the provinces are watching two other impending decisions closely. Government plans to "priva-tize" the British Airports Authority, possibly selling off its seven sirports - three serving London, the remainder in Scotland - could also have a serious impact on their future growth.

The Civil Aviation Authority. which at present operates a number of smaller airports in the country, while providing air traffic control and other technical services at others, is also undergoing Government scrutiny.

Regional airports

chester International, with a new management team heavily oriented towards marketing, has been pursuing this path, and an indication of its success are regular jumbo flights of the Australian airline Qantas.

Run by two local authorities, Munchester International is the big success of the British regional airports scene, ploughing £5m profit back into the rates in the last financial to the rates in the reason why passengers living in, say, the north of England or southern Scotland should have to last financial year, but for many others the story is a far less happy one. According to the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, only nine of the 23 local-authority run airports were in surplus in the financial year

1981-82. Overall, the municipal airports returned a profit of £2.1m for the year, but the bulk of this was contributed by four airports, Manchester, Birmingham, East Midlands, and Luton. CIPFA's forecast for 1983-84 is for an improvement, with a total surplus of £3.8m, elthough it now appears that only eight of the airports will be in surplus, and with losses in the case of Liverpool, and a total surplus of nearly £3m. Apart from Sumburgh, all eight Scottish airports run largely as social services by the Civil Aviation Authority are loss-makers, and the authority, under direction which has blighted the growth of them off to the private sector. It is the regional airports since the end a trend which has already begun to the Second World War may be in the West Country, with operated by Brymon Airways, one services, of the commuter airlines which are opening up new air travel business for regional airports throughout the country.

One of the great problems which has always held back the development of airports in the British provinces has been local pride: airports are operated, often a large cost to the local ratepayers, in areas where none could be justified, and in many cases in the geographical shadow of another vying for the same passenger and freight markets. Questions have also been raised as to the wisdom of allowing local authorities to operate what are highly-rechnical businesses with large budgets, especially since these airports have to compete for a share of the rates with sewage, cemeteries, and playing fields. But although the decisions on buying new radars, or teminal and runway extensions, may be slow in coming from council com-mittee, and although airports compete with each other each year for Government approval of major schemes, there is no evidence to suggest that safety standards are compromised.

The Civil Aviation Authority keeps a tight watch on technical standards at every airport, whether it be Manchester International, or Barra, where landings general manager of the Bristol are on the beach, and there are airport for the last three crucial professional companies such as International Aeradio ready to the result of this could conceive more aggressive telling. In the past, it had been suggested that there should be a central body controlling the development of regional airports on a national basis, and that the British Airports Authority should take on this role. It is a suggestion which never found favour with the BAA, as that body pursued its remit from Government to be profitable. Today, free enterprise policies are beginning to dominate both the airports and airline sectors of British aviation, and this should lead, in the long term, to a leaner industry, and a better deal for the public for which it lan Cran, director of the Cardiff-Wales airport does not agree. He believes that no large centre of population can be without its own airport and is convinced of the role of local authorities in providing them. He also says the modern air traveller, businessman or bolidaymaker, now expects such a local service.

Both airports, together with Exeter, owe much to the increasing desire of air travellers to fly abroad without having to waste a day going to Gatwick or Heath-row. So, for them, the growth of inclusive tour holidays by operators using regional airports has been a major boon.

All three of those airports are in the hands of local authorities, but the story of Plymouth airport is also that of Bill Bryce, an airlines entrepreneur still pushing his business from strength to The Cardiff-Wales airport has been owned and operated since 1974 by the three county councils of Glamorgan - mid, south and west. It is officially designated as the regional airport of South Wales and the South West. In 1981-82 the councils were airport's bread and butter and 85 per cent of the 400,000 passengers using Cardiff this year were on tours. Even so, scheduled services are substantial (Dan Air is the major carrier). The airport is particularly pleased about its link with Schipol (Amsterdam) for world-wide connections and now

Mr Wilson, the manager, is in no doubt that the charter tour business has been a major success. Two-thirds of last year's total of 303,000 passengers were "tour customers; the remaining one-third on scheduled service, mainly domestic.

The region as a whole is wellsome of them too close together to make true economic sense. It was a problem that was identified by the 1978 White Paper as having particular relevance to Manchester and Liverpool, and to Newcastle and Teesside.

The document saw no reason why the future development of either Newcastle or Teesside should be inhibited, but classified the former as a B category regional airport, and the later as With Manchester as a category A airport, and Liverpool a C. it is inevitable that Liverpool should be heavily overshadowed, and continues to be a consistent lossmaker. Leeds/Bradford airport at Yeadon: the main runway is being lengthened and the terminal building extension will be completed by the end of 1984

Luton, flying into profit

The airports of the Midlands and East Anglia continue to have a lively existence of their own, in spite of the development in recent ears of greatly-improved surface inks between the communities which they serve and the main London zirports.

Luton 🔂 😂

Luton is the biggest of the group, handling about 1.8m passengers a year, the vast majority of them on package holiday flights to the beaches of the Mediterranean, or winter sports slopes. Run by the Luton second phase of a £10m development plan largely concentrated on the terminal buildings. An airconditioned departure lounge, part of a new arrivals hall, a covered arrivals area, and offices for customs and excise, immigration, and health staff have already been handed over by the builders as part of phase two. According to forecasts by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy, Luton airport will make a profit of around £1m during the 1983-84 financial year, although as its fortunes are so closely tied up with those of the travel trade which, in turn, can be seriously affected by recessionary forces, the outcome will remain in doubt until the last minute.

First European Boeing 767 base

The airport will become, early n 1984, the base for the first European Boeing 767 wide-bodied airliners, Britannia Air-ways, the biggest British packageholiday sirtine, having chosen this type to augment its 737s, Monarch, another British independent airline specializing in the "bucket-and-spade" business. introduced the other new Boeing type, the 757, to Luton several months ago. But although its speciality is package holiday lights, Luton is also an important centre for business aviation, with McAlpine basing its fleet of over 20 British Aerospace 125 jets and other executive types there. The MI motorway which opens up Luton to the massive catch-ment areas of London and the Midlands also runs close to Eas Midlands, at Castle Donington near Derby, an airport which handled around 900,000 passen gers during the 1982-83 financial year and which, according to CIPFA forecasts, could approach the 1m mark during 1983-84. Like Luton, it is profitable, with a forecast surplus of £1.3m in the financial year. Both scheduled and non-scheduled services operate from it.

The 1978 airports White Paper made the point that East Midlands, although further from the main centre of population in the Midlands than Birmingham, is well-sited in relation motorway network, and has an important industrial and commercial catchment area of its own The airport inevitably view with Birmingham, and two advantages which it has over its neighbour are that it lends itself more readily to expansion, while fewer people

The airport suffers from the drawbacks of a restricted site, and has traditionally been the target for environmental protests from residents of the built-up areas to hand, it is superbly sited to serve the important concentration of industry and commerce in the West Midlands, which demands business connexions with other parts of Britain and Europe, and to serve the holiday pursuits of one of the country's main concentrations of population. It is also in the centre of a web of motorways and main railway lines, and is close by the national

The West Midlands County Council, its present owner, is seeking to break free of the restrictions of the airport site by developing an ambitious new terminal and associated works. including a driverless train system to link it to the exhibition centre and Birmingham international station. The train system chosen is MAGLEV, which uses a frictionless magnetic suspension instead of conventional wheels and is driven along a guideway track elevated over roads and car parks by a linear induction motor.

Construction of the new terminal building began in 1981. and its design is planned to handle upto 3m passengers and 33.000 aircraft movements by 1990. One great advantage which it offers passengers compared with the original building, where they have to walk across the apron in all weathers to reach their aircraft, is a series of telescopic, covered piers which will link directly with the aircraft

West Midlands CC expects the new development to create up to 2,500 new jobs by the late 1980s, to altract more commerce and industry to the area, and to extend the list of destinations. At present some 30 are served by scheduled flights and 40 by charters. One interesting recent development is dropped by British Airways during its recent severe retrench-

Norwich, jointly owned by the County Council, is gaining traffic slowly as commuter services develop, and it becomes an increasingly important jumpingoff point for Schipol airport, Amsterdam, which promotes itself as, "the third London airport". Air UK is a big operator through the airport, and has one of the biggest overhaul bases for aircraft there outside Holland. The airport handled some 172,000 passengers in 1982-83 and is forecast to increase this by five per cent to 180,000 during the current financial year. According to CIPFA estimates, it will make a marginal surplus this year.

Southend, owned by the local borough council, has traditionally specialized in cross-Channel links, and is expected to handle 107,000 passengers this year, seven per cent up on 1982-83. CIPFA forecasts that it will lose £460,000 during the current year.

Like all the airports in the region, it lies under the shadow of Stansted. A decision to proceed with the developmen of that airport to take 15m passengers a year, as is wanted by the British Airports Authority, would have a significant impact on their future, and would inevitably inhibit their long-term growth prospects.

There operations, the Aberdeen heliport now ranks among the busiest in the world, busier even than

Houston, Texas. Last year, the number of helicopter passengers increased by 40 per cent - more than twice the number of three years ago. Overall, Aberdeen handled a 7 per cent increase in passengers and cent increase in passengers and made a trading profit of £591,000. Oil and related industry has also been behind the growth of international traffic into Aberdeen in addition to the healthy level of domestic flights. Even though the oil industry has moved from busy development into the steadier production phase, air traffic is likely to heavy into the next century.

Against that dramatic success must be set the sad miscalculatios at Sumburgh in the Shetlands where the civil Avi-ation Authority invested £30m in a new terminal to handle business at the beginning of the oil boom.

Sumburgh is no longer thronged with technicians and roustabouts transferring from fixed-wing aircraft to helicopter on their way to the oilfields in the on their way to the oilfields in the East Shetland basin. Its business centre for fixed-wing traffic.

The island aircraft hop lo income and profit fell by almost £2m at Sumburgh and the expectation for a heavy deficit.

The CAA has the most difficult job among the Scottish airport authorities since none of its eight authorities since none of its appliance and with surports, with the exception of fire appliance and with surports, with the exception of marking the runways to comply with licence regulations. In central Scotland there is a superabundance of excellent airports, notably Giasgow and Edinburgh for European and domestic traffic and Prestwick for long-hanl jets, principally to and from North America.

The British Airports Anthority is determined to protect Prest-wick's translatiantic flights, despite the objections in Edinburgh and Glasgow that more routes be opened to those cities. Last year Edinburgh handled 1,2 million passengers, a quarter million passengers, a quarter million lewer than the airport was designed for, giving its boosters another argument why more overseas flights should land there. Overseas visitors to the Edin-burgh Festival consider it odd to land at Preswick on the west coast of Scotland and travel by coach or train for more than an hour, passing two perfectly equipped international airports on route. A BAA spokesman admitted that in a perfect world that Scotland would probably be best served by a central international

"Edinburgh and Glasgow were

Apart from that, the landscape did not favour such a development. Much of the windswept high ground separating the two cities often has its head in the clouds. Instead, the BAA will continue to develop Prestwick

These days, the Scottish air traveller has horizons far broader than those of Bonnie Prince Charlie.

He has no fewer than four international airports on his doorstep.

He can fly direct to dozens of destinations in Britain, Europe, Canada and the USA. Under British Airports Authority control the total number of passengers has climbed to 5.6 million a year.

Over the last 6 years, traffic has grown by an average of 5% annually.

And in 1982/3 we achieved an even greater percentage growth than our counterparts in the South East group. But these results haven't appeared out of Scotch mist.

Since 1973 £50 million has been invested to improve facilities. New terminals and a new runway have been built.

And we have plans to meet all future demands.

Naturally, the developments in the North Sea must take some of the credit.

Oil business continues to pour into Aberdeen. It is now the busiest helicopter airport in the world.

Indeed, the airports of Scotland are the envy of many countries.

We'll be pleased to send you a pocket timetable of all the services, including 35 flights a day to London.

Caroline Moorehead meets Shiva Naipaul, whose novel A Hot Country is published this week

Earning experience to elevate into fiction

"Every day", reflects a character in Shiva Naipaul's new novel, A Hot Country, "I have to redefine myself." It is, admits Naipaul, himself talking. Trinidadian, a descendant of Hindus who migrated to the West Indies at the turn of the century, Naipaul returns often, both in conversation and writing. to the theme of belonging.

"I'm afflicted by that sense of unreality", he says. "I don't have a social station to fall back on. I'm an ambiguous person, a fluid sort of being. My life has been defined by three poles that don't meet. Trinidad, where I was born: India, which provided me with a religion and a name; and England, I exist in a very vulnerable relationship to adds, gave him a permanent feeling of being a minority.

Naipaul is now in his late thirties, a tall, somewhat corpulent man with round face and round glasses and the courteous, slightly grave manner of someone older. He gives an impression of self-sufficiency, of purposefulness. He has just moved from Maida Vale to a first-floor flat in Belsize Park in north London, Workmen are moving plugs and neat piles of books piled up against the walls. He is apologetic, a little uneasy as if the routine of things had been upsettingly disrupted.

He came from Trinidad on a scholarship to Oxford in 1964, at the age of 18, the younger son in a family of five girls and two boys. The older son, Vidiadhar, better known as V. S. Naupaul, was already here and writing. Their faher, who had worked on the Trinidad Guardian and written several short stories, had died when Shiva was seven. The younger boy was to read philosophy and psychology. "The going-abroad was part of the ritual of growingup. There was no question of doing anything clase. I travelled by ship: the scene on the docks, the farewells, the gathering of aunts, the new suits, It was all part of the rite."

Friends who met him then recall a slender and timid young man shattered by an incident in Notting Hill Gate when a lorry driver spat at him. "I arrived with adoloscent rapture", he says. "Most of my notions were bookish. I remember being very afraid. The first night I stayed in a room in the British Council: I had never been in a room like that on my own. I felt hungry but I wondered how to use the restaurant. There was a lot of alarm in my

At Oxford he read Chinese; the behavioural psychology of the 1960s baffled him and he wanted "the cheap thrill of trying to tackle Confucius in the original". It was a frivolous choice, not part of a grander scheme. Just before leaving university he began to write a story that turned two years later and after many metamorphoses into a warmly praised first novel, Fireflies. Meanwhile, he had married.

As we talk, the phone rings. It is his brother, "to console me for not being on the Booker Prize short list". (V.S. Naipaul won it a few years ago with In a Free State.) Both brothers made their Shiva felt overshadowed? (V.S. Naipaul is 13 years older.) "In no sense has it made it easier for me. But I have done what I wanted to. There is nothing else to be said." He laughs, to make the words sound less censorious. After Fireflies and a second novel, The Chip-Chip Gatherers, Shiva Naipaul turned to non-fiction, although he insists that he regards both as one body of work, different only in that nonfiction "continues to perform the great service of widening and deepening my experiences" which later may or may not emerge in fiction. He is careful to distinguish his own writing from the "new journalism" of mainly American writers like Tom Wolfe, arguing that whereas Wolfe makes the narrator the central feature, creating situations in which to dramatize himself, he is more passive, more a subjective reporter of "Handling the self, the seeing, experiencing "P, is one of the most difficult things a writer can do. The persons isn't even or balanced: but then we don't live in an objective world."

Naipaul talks as he writes, with often unusual choice of word, thoughts fluently marshalled into sequence, "One only gradually becomes a writer. You have to teach yourself with each book; there is no such thing as a writer's skill, neutrally deployed.

At the end of the year, Naipaul is going to Australia, to spend five or six months travelling, starting in South-East Asia, and with no clear idea of what kind of book will result. His wife and nine-year-old son, who goes to school in Hampstead, will stay in London. He has never wanted to go back to Trinidad and says there is nothing there to feed or keep him. "In many ways it would have been a kind of death to go back. London has room for the oddity I have become.

It was trying to live in the United States, however, first on the West Coast and later in Connecticut, that taught him that he did not want to live anywhere but England, "It's familiar", he says, "I'm accustomed to it. But I don't believe in roots. I will go on living my peculiar life, always oblique to the larger society in it but not of it. It's larger society, in it but not of it. It's impossible for me to have roots. I don't know what soil to put them down in. But I don't search for them either. I'm

Television Time bravely spent

Some courage was involved in ITV's decision to show Brian Moser's trilogy Frontier, which follows the cocaine trail from the coca leaf plantations in Bolivia and Amazonia to its arrival in America where, despite govern-ment efforts, $25 billion of the stuff is imported annually to be sniffed at smart-set parties and to offset the ennui of affluence.

Two hour-long films were shown last night and a third, followed by a profile of Mr Moser on Channel 4, will be shown tonight. That is three hours and 45 minutes, but time well spent, and more courage was n from Mr Moser, who was shot at and threatened and whose crew endured many vicissitudes to bring this graphic story to the screen for Central.

We began last night in Colombia with a Mr Elisco who runs a jungle laboratory where he processes the leaf. Despite primitive laboratory conditions, sporadic police raids and gun battles, he produces cocaine to a quality that made a scientist examining the result in pristine conditions in Miami exclaim You can't help wondering where he learnt his chemistry".

Mr Elisco, who gathered rubber until it proved profitless, had earlier explained that poverty had been his incentive and that a few pesos for his old age his ambition. Dealers pay $17 a gram in the jungle; they market it in America at $400 on the streets.

been chewed for thousands of years an an insulation against the harshness of life. In Bolivia, where we were after the intrusion of News at Ten, tin miners have coca-breaks as we might have teabreaks. Coca deadens the pangs of thirst and hunger and presumably compensates for working all day and not finding any un, which means they do not get paid. "If it wasn't for coca we would be completely screwed up", ex-plained one. But the price is going up for the miners as demand reases from the screwed-up of the western world and as the Bolivians, at the behest of the US. try to eradicate it.

The peasants who grow coca have no option. It is their sole income - "God gave us that leaf and no one can take it away". But the army is trying and the Indians are in the middle: poverty on one side, the army on the other. Mr Moser questioned the necessity of their plight as the medical effects of coca, and even cocaine, he said, are still uncertain.

He tells a story well and his crew deserve medals. Tonight, those of us who are fixed will be in America, learning how cocaine is smuggled in and of its uses and abuses. Mr Moser will be returning to his questioning of whether the eradication of the drug at source can be justified.

Dublin Theatre Festival Terrific basketball

the Dublin Theatre Festival has reached its twenty-fifth anniversary, and Monday's opening ceremony at the Mansion House was an occasion for justified selfcongratulations. Dr Patrick Hillery, Head of State, bestowed his bilingual blessings on the event and the Lord Mayor declared that the time had now come for the rest of Ireland to pay its share towards guaranteeing the festival's international status.

I am not sure that this is good idea. Dublin may be a poor relation of Edinburgh but, whatever the trials of poverty, it has always remained a hospitably non-exclusive affair. With VAT running at 23 per cent top seat prices are still only £6.50, and there is no elitist division between official and fringe events.

Critically for the first show, we quit one stately room in the Mansion House for another laid out as a sports pitch for the Cork Theatre Company production of Israel Horovitz's The Former One-On-One Basketball Cham-pion. This consists of an apparently chance meeting between a fatherless 17-year-old boy and a middle-aged man who turns out to be the has-been of the title and one of the boy's lost heroes. Horovitz has another melodramatically contrived reason for bringing them together, but the sporting contest that occupies most of the play develops into a Talbot's and Peter Fitzgerald's accents are apt to slide about but their baskerball is terrific.

At the Eblana, Stewart Parker's Pratt's Fall sums up much that is both right and wrong about Dublin. It is well written, intellectually ambitious, unfin-ished and facetiously self-indulspeech which one Godfrey Dudley is desperately rehearsing while getting dressed for his wedding. This certainly establish-es his character as a bystander. and allows the pushy figures from Ecstatic at the sight of their hero, who had been lured away and detained so long in a foreign land, the grateful peasants rushed forward in supplication, presentkeepsakes: flowers, handkerchiefs and a small native vegetable known as the leek, bound with red no special gift, revived an antique custom and laid their scanty nether garments at his feet.

It was as silly as that, and as unconvincing. On Monday Tom Jones returned to London with a show whose script might have been lifted entire, in all its flat contrivance, from his television series of many years ago. It was as if his time in America had been spent in arrested animation.

Jones still has the big-boyo voice but no imaginative use is made of it. Listening to his rote version of "The Green, Green Grass of Home", I wondered why be had not thought to try instead the song's young cousin, Bruce Springsteen's "Wreck on the Highway"; then, after that, Jackson Browne's "The Pre-

"Danny Boy", "Delilah", "What's New, Pussycat" and "I (Who Have Nothing)". There was not the merest flicker of creative enthusiasm just a balding retread of the ballads-and-belters formula devised for him by Gordon Mills his early mentor, in the middle 1960s, when he turned away from rock 'n' roll. The disco arrangement of "Fever", more Pontin's than Studio 54, represented the only concession to the tastes of the last 15 years; he seemed more comfortable with the raucous pseudo-soul travestics of Joe Tex's "Show Me" and Otis Redding's "I Can't Turn You Loose", which came in – like the show as a whole - direct from Las Vegas on autopilot.

MENDED LAST POSTING DATES

The special pleasure of the evening lay in Robin Canter's clearly articulated and controlled playing of a reproduction 1720s oboe, both in the Telemann and in three sonatas by Handel: here his mellow, fruity tone and crisp rhythms were attentively thrown into relief by Mr Ross's spirited harpsichord and by Anthony Pleeth's tasteful cello.

The Pasquier Trio made their greatest impact as a quartet, with the pianist Jean-Philippe Collard. But that is much less a reflection on the quality of their playing than on the two works they chose to play on their own, Ravel's fairly charmless Sonata for Violin and Cello and Roussel's arid, contrapuntally austere String and collective Trio. Nonetheless both works to the music.

If a Telemann cantata fails to extravagant rubato too often make a sharp impression, one is blunted the work's rhythmic often inclined to blame the pulse. violin, the rich resonance of Bruno Pasquier's viola and a warmth and whispering restraint in Roland Pidoux's cello that reminded me of Fournier.

The link with Fournier was further reinforced by the perform-ance of Faure's Second Piano Quartet, which in its tastefulness and easy flow, its passion and gloriously muted sounds, recalled the famous recording by Fournier, Thibaud, Vieux and Marguérite Long. If the ear was constantly attracted by the polished, pearly translucence of Mr Collard's playing this did not cloud the fact that the Pasquier Trio was constantly aware of the nuartes of one another's playing and that of one another's playing and that it was gifted with an individual Emotional responsiveness was not always the most prominen Ankara Chamber which, under Gürer Aykal, gave a concert of Mozart, Ulvi Cema Erkin and Vivaldi, with Suna Kar as soloist in The Seasons. This is a disciplined group with a bright string sound, but in Mozart's D major Divertimento, K136, delicacy and grace were sacrificed in favour of almost mechanically precise shaping, giving little leeway for anything more than bland, routine expressiveness. However, Erkin's Sinfonietta, with its Turkish inflexions, coaxed more spontaneous ges-tures from an orchestra which plainly has much to offer in the way of muscular attack and rhythmic incisiveness.

Abolition of pension reliefs could save £5.1 billion a year

By Graham Searjeant

The Chancellor could cut the standard rate of income tax possibly by as much as 10p in the pound from 30p to 20p by abolishing special tax reliefs, mainly on pensions, according to radical new calculations by the Inland Revenue.

The new calculations, thought to have been ordered by Mr Nigel Lawson, Chancellor of the Exchequer, show that lax reliefs on pension contributions, investment and lump sum payments alone amount to £5.1 billion a year for a conventional mension schemes for the occupational pension schemes for the

This is probably an underestimate of the long-term balance between reliefs on pension contributions and investment on the one hand and taxation of pension payments on the other because of the tuge growth of occupational pensions in the past generation and particularly since the 1975 Act.

The interim dividends are payable on 22nd November 1983 to shareholders on the register at the close of business on 21st October 1983; the share registers will be closed from 70th October 1983 to 21st October 1983, both dates inclusi in accordance with Article 132(a) of the Company's Articles of Association, the directors have resolved that the Interim dividends will be satisfied partly in the form of an Issue of additional shares by way of scrip dividends and partly by minimum cash dividends of 1.0c per 'A' share and 0.2c per 'B' share, the minimum cash dividends being paid in order to ensure that the shares of the Company continue to be Authorised Investments for the purpose of the Trustee Ordinance of Hong Kong; but that shareholders will be given the option of receiving their interim dividends in cash in place of part or all of such scrip dividends. Full details of the scrip dividend procedures will be given in a circular which will accompany the complete Interim Report to be sent to shareholders on 3rd October 1983.

Prospects. The results for the second half of 1983 should continue at satisfactory levels. Cathay Pacific Airways' strong operating results should be sustained and I am forecasting a year-end result for the atribus substantially in excess of that achieved in 1982. In addition, the property markets in which the property division operates are expected to continue to show signs of improvement and a satisfactory contribution from that division should be achieved for the whole of 1983 against a background of difficult trading conditions. I do not expect Swire Pacific's profits for the whole of 1983 to show the same rate of increase as achieved in the first half year but I do expect them to be significantly higher than those for 1982, and the final dividends to be recommended for the year should be at least double the World Bank chief pleads for more funds

'Time bomb' warning by Clausen

From Frances Williams

An impassioned plea for the rich countries of the world to step up the flow of financial resources to the poorest nations was launched yesterday by Mr A. W. "Tom" Clausen, President of the World Bank, in his address to ministers and bankers at the joint. annual meeting of the bank and the International Monetary Fund. Without more official development aid, and increased funds for the World Bank and its soft loan arm, the International Development Association, many poor countries faced deepening poverty which direatened world social and political stability, Mr Clausen

"The economic distress of the poorest nations is a time bomb ticking away. We delay defusing it

INVESTORS' NOTEBOOK edited by Michael Prest

Triple jump for NEI foreign orders

Northern Engineering Industries Half-year to 30.6.63 Pretax profit $20.1m (£18m) Stated earnings 5.53p (5.21p)
Turnover £413m (£405m)
Net interim dividend 1.65p (1.5p)
Share price $11\lambda p down 4\lambda p
Notice of the control of the Dividend payable 28.11.83

With poor prospects for recovcry at home, Northern Engineering Industries has channelled its energies into winning orders overseas. In the half year to June 30, overseas orders have trebled and account for 60 per cent of the total group orderbook of £1.5bn, against 22 per cent a year ago. The increase in the overseas operations has helped stave off the effects of the prolonged recession at home which still shows no sign of ending. The improvement overseas is reflected in the interim figures which show a 12 per cent increase in pretax profits to £20.1m, compared with the same stage last year. This was achieved on turnover 2 per cent higher at

Efforts to improve productivity continue, with a 10 per cent improvement during the six months and further benefits likely from rationalization of the group's businesses. Overheads were trimmed with the loss of 700 jobs and the closure of two factories at home and one in the US at an extraordinary cost of £1,97m

The board has indicated that the rationalization, which has involved 2,000 job losses in Britain and 1,000 overseas is almost complete. This leaves the group with 32,000 employees worldwide, Turning point to success for System X

There are two legends about the worldwide telecommunications

The first concerns a Kansas City undertaker who was so fed up with calls being directed to a competitor's funeral parlour - by the competitor's wife who worked at the local telephone exchange that he invented the world's first automatic call-switching device. The other is that after more than 13 years of development, by £275m. Britain's third generation electronic telephone network, System X, is a commercial failure. The first is true - and Mr Almon B Strowger's anti-body snatching equipment is, more than 80 years on, still used in 4,202 of Britain's 6.598 local

The second is not. Proof. however, will have to wait. By the exporter's harsh creed, "the only success is an order that is signed, sealed, delivered and paid for".

British Telecom can talk for days about the amazing benefits has begun to instal, with initial equipment orders of £150m to be added to twice a year.

By 1986, 30 main centres will be linked by digital transmission, with 80 trunk exchanges in place two years later. The City of London will be the first to be blessed with the many, and often business-applicable, add-on ser-vices under a pilot scheme next million telebones in the world".

But the only thing the manufacturers, Plessey and GEC, cannot cations. "The orders placed so far add is the name of their first for systems which can compete important overseas buyer of System X.

That moment, though, may come in as little as two weeks'

The manufactures refuse to be

East customer, it is said, is close

The excitement of business insiders is more easily understood if they are likened to zoo-keepers awaiting the birth of an animal which has managed to combine the rarity of the panda with the pregnancy of an elephant: orders for digital networks have been few, and follow tendering periods of up to three years.

Whether System X gets the next order or not, the noticeable in the companies involved is that they are not chewing crossed fingers. They maintain that, within a very short period, their chances of success will improve System X was developed jointly by British Telecom, Plessey. GEC and Standard Telephones, which later dropped out. A year ago, development collaboration ended, leaving the two manufacturers as rivals not only for BT's business, but to grab a share for Britain of a highly competitive £30bn a year market to bring the world into the new telephone-based electronic age.

The heart of this competition is in countries which do not have their own manufacturers. The frustration in the System X camp is not so much over the "no sales" talks as over the tantalising says Mr Eric Clark, chief executive of Plessey Communifor systems which can compete with System X amount to six or seven million. That means there is more than 98 per cent of today's market still to go - and it is growing and growing. The two deals for which System drawn about their immediate X has been short-listed during the sales prospects. The industry, recent past, in China and India, of a working 5.000 line exchange.

Kenlyne

British Telecom has so far installed 3,500 lines, but will have reached the magic 5,000 mark by next spring. Thus, one of the most important reasons why competitors have won so far is simple:

product availability. Most have got there. British telecommunications specialists insist, by taking a different route, mostly by developing less advanced and not fully digitalized systems, using that technique for transmission, but adapting analog exchange equipment to work on computer controls.

That suggests that System X is technologically ahead, but its producers acknowledge that the opposition is scurrying to catch up. How long System X will, therefore, be able to claim an however, is buzzing with the sort carried demands that the system therefore, be able to claim an beans. The other view must be that. with BT paying development costs to produce a system for the adveanced British market, it was not compatible with the needs of Third World buyers, who have been most often, identified as its best potential customers. It is repeatedly accused of being late. "It would have been nice had it been earlier," Mr Richard Rey-nolds, GEC Telecommunications managing director, says, "given the demand that has now emerged. Everbody knew that the world was going to go digital, but you would have to be a genius to assess the exact point when it

"System X is not a can of

But what about the doubleedged adjective that is regularly used? "This Concorde thing is rubbish" said a renownedly-mild Mr John Alvey, BT's engineer-in-

"We could not have achieved the same thing by going out to international tender. There is nothing better than System X, and every technical decision that was taken throughout the devel-opment phase was made with the needs of world markets very

Yet every time a digital system is offered to a customer, the need to tailor it to individual requirements is still immense. "The technical documents involved in our Indian bid stacked into volumes this long," explains Mr Reynolds, stretching his hands far apart, like the fisherman-with-theone-that-got-away.

The reason why two orders dipped away to France with one for a £150m factory, contains many of the elements of what Mr Clark describes as "the reality of selling" in today's highly-competitive world markets.

Everyone on the industry had heard that CIT-Alcatel was never really in the bidding. It was certainly not in the last three at the technical evaluation stage.

Telephone calls from M Mitterrand the French President to Mrs Indira Gandhi have been rumoured and as one European trade official, who was closely involved, observes. "India bough a digital telecommunication system at the same time as it sewed up a package for jet fighters and nuclear collaboration - and that was no coincidence."

The fact that India had always said that it wanted two technologies, to ensure that it did not become dependent on one supplier, increased the pain of the second French order - but left the belief that the market has not been closed.

Messrs Clark, Reynolds and Alvey accompanied Mr Kenneth Baker, the Industry and Information Technology Minister, to India last month, to talk about a range of telecommunications proposals. "We have an on-going dialogue with India," says Mr

China was much heart-warm-ing for the British, "We could have sold there had System X been up and running in significan quantities in Britain, says Mr Clark emphatically.

The order, for just $11m,, went to L M Ericsson, of Sweden, for an exchange in Guangdong - a province with an argent need to build up its communications having soaked up hundreds of the foreign joint venture factories.

"They were looking for evidence of a 5,000-line, fully-digitalized exchange in operation, adds Mr Clark. The fact that they hesitated for at least a year was a measure of the want-factor they had for System X tech-

The age-old barter system has assumed new significance while a "tremendous" growth is taking place in counter-purchasing deals and a little known loanpaper market called a forfait, or forfeiture note.

Forfait notes came into rominence as a trade tool in the late 1960s through West Germany's trade with the Eastern block. Vienna became the primary market, while Switzerland and London have since

The international debt crisis has pushed this form of trade financing to the fore and over the last two years the market in the paper has virtually doubled to an estimated £3,000m a year. Midland Bank recently estab-

He pointed out that in the current round of rescheduling, forfeiture notes are being repaid and are not included in any deferment - even by countries like Brazil, Mexico, Argentina

Mr Nigel Hudson is general manager of the London branch of Creditanstalt, Austria's biggest company and biggest bank, which handles 40 per cent of Austria's export financing.

He says: "There is a big difference in a country allowing a default on a note covering the import of goods supporting a basic industry than allowing a default on an internationally syndicated loan."

A forfeiture note is basically a promissory note issued by an importer who spreads his payment over several years -usually between three and five

One of the main problems to years - and includes in that note emerge from the international debt crisis has been how leading bank will guarantee it, so there are legally enforceable rights. The note is then sold by the exporter to its bank which pays the debt, minus the interest. The note is then discounted and sold into a secondary market, with a hard cerrency backing, where investors will ride the yield curve. The investor, however, has no recourse to the bank from whom he bought the note, so the

For those countries where even that form of note is not accepted, barter and counterpurchasing are growing as trade financing tools.

For Third World countries. where even their commodities. it any, have limited attractions, the counter-purchasing system has taken on new significance.

This involves a specialized company - Creditanstalt's is AWT, a London-based sub-sidiary that deals with Britain's accepting houses and America's big banks like Chase Manhattan - acting as a middle-man for the exchange of goods.

This stystem satisfies those exporters which cannot or do not want to find a market for goods offered in exchange. The goods do not have to be internally produced. They can be left over from another, entirely different

For instance, AWT sold Jamaican aluminium to pay for the import of a large order of Land Rovers. AWT's job is to sell the goods and work out a price with the exporter.

"All the systems show tremendous growth." Mr Hud-son added. "But they do not counter risks. If you know what you are doing, however, they can certainly be less risky than a straight bank loan."

It was the brilliance of his 12metre design that finally broke the have held in the field of yacht design and sechnology for Australia II. Alan Bond's radical wing-keeled challenger, held such a speed advantage over the American yacht that her crew were able to make the most basic blunders - and still win.

The most dramatic illustration of this came in the last race when the Australians recovered from an cight-second deficit at the start to cight-second deficit at the start to pull out a four-boat-length lead over the American yacht halfway up the first beat. Her crew, skippered by John Betrand, then broke the cardinal rule of match racing by failing to cover their rivals, preferring instead to seek out the favourable wind shift. They paid the price, for Liberty, skippered by Dennis Conner, one of the world's most successful match race exponents, was able to gain the best of the breeze out on the port side of the course and turn the deficit into a star-length lead at the first weather mark.

The Americans then extended this advantage to round the fourth mark 57 seconds ahead. Against any other 12-metre, this margin would have assured Conner of an easy statement but not against the Ben victory, but not against the Ben Lexcen-designed Australia II. the Americans, guessing all summer — Australia II's winged keel, the Lexcen brainwave, perfected in Holland, that gave the yacht her casier handling and superior speed up wind and down.

Contrary to popular belief, the keel does not carry a bulb at its base but has a uniform chord-section throughout its length, which merely makes the keel thicker at its base. On the aft edge there is a simple trim-tab with a two-part articulating plastic faring to provide a smooth curve to the foil when the tab is turned.

Ironically, Britain's Victory Syn-Ironically, Britain's Victory Syndicate was given a pointer to the potential offered by this radical idea when model boat designer David Hollom produced a one-tenth scale sailing model of his own 12-metre design back in 1981, which boasted a bulbout keel and wings that provided a similar end-plate effect to the keel. Unfortunately the brilliance of his idea was not recognized by syndicate head Pete de Savary, who turned it down as too radical, despite the fact that the yacht had shown considerable yacht had shown considerable superiority both upwind and down

Hollom allowed The Times to show the lines of his initial design - Royal Oak - to Dr Peter van Oossanan, director of the shipmodel basin in Holland who had helped Lexcen to perfect his own ideas for a winsed-keel

Dr van Oossanan said he was amazed that Hollom's ideas and findings had been so close to their her own path, gybing several times in an ill-fated attempt to find a stronger breeze, while Australia II, development programme.

Bond, a man of his word

On a spring morning in 1970 at a ship building yard in Mamaroneck, New York, Alan Bond, of Australia, and the crew from his yacht... Apollo, spotted an unusual yacht and climbed aboard to inspect her. She was the newly-launched Valiant, a 12 metre, in which all the winches were below deck, and which had been built for the defence of the America's Cup that summer.

Bond, who had never seen a 12 metre before, was fascinated by it an he turned to Ben Lexcen, Apollo's designer, and said: "I want you to design me a boat like that. I am going to win that Cup." That was 13 ears and four challenges ago, and after more than $16m (£11m) had been spent Bond achieved his ambition of being the first challenger to defeat the United States.

A touch of Irish in a game

so eccentrically English

Bicycle polo was once an Olympic sport, so let us have no unseemly mockery of the nine teams who recently trekked across England to thrash, and pedal for the George Brake Trophy at Purley Way olaying fields. The twinkled-kneed brotherhood may have looked a trifle incongruous as, knees going like beserk pistons, they flung themselves into the fray on a pitch surrounded by football fields and

Sunday afternoon George Bests, but they were playing a real sport with honoured traditions. The rain was goming down in great sheets while players between games in this round robin tournament stood around in anoraks and bedewed spectacles, fiddling with bikes, talking bicycle polo shop or pedalling about practicing telling passes. "Not me," said The Maltees Cat, "I don't race, I play the game."

But unlike the equine game, a game in which running a team costs as much as running an oceanoing yacht, I am told, bicycle polo is cheap, A polo bike will cost a more £89.

The sport is in the middle of rescuing itself from an all-time low, with membership of the Bicycle Polo Association (BPA) hitting unplumbed depths three years ago, but at Purley, Chelsea Pedlars turned up, a newly registered outfit with an impressive 42 playing members. They had been going for three years outside the fold, but now they were contesting the George Brake Trophy for the first time, with public school accents and one player wearing for reasons best known to himself, a pair of real jodphurs.

"Basically it all started as a hare-brained scheme dreamt up in a pub," explained the Chelsea captain, Nick Mayhew-Sanders, Joe Garnett, a player with a silken kerchief about his head, added: "We play because it really is great fun. We use smaller mallet heads than most of the players here, and the ball rises something wicked. That tends to keep the adrenalin flowing." They play twice a week, more often than most of the more experienced players,

Technique

But experience and technique count in this game, a strange sport that demands strange skills. "I'm a said Clem Cowling, a slip of a youth somewhere in his 60s. "I didn't start playing until 1947." He was playing at back for Crystal Palace. much to his surprise: he was co-opted into the side after he has turned up to watch. They were doing rather well, as it happened. "Of course, in the old days Palace were the old enemy," he said. "I used to be with Croydon Aces, you see."

This is, indeed, a long-established sport. In fact, it is probably the only sport to have been invented twice. Perhaps not altogether surprisingly, it was invented by an Irishman first time around: Richard Mecredi was a racing cyclist too old for the road and so, like The Maltese Cat in the Kipling story, he started to play the game, pausing only to invent it. That was 1891, and to this day. Ireland are the world's only Olympic gold medal winners in the sport of bicycle polo. That was in 1908, when the Olympic Games were held in Shepherd's Bush.

Bicycle polo, a sport that is in the middle of rescuing itself

But Cyril Scott was unaware of these fascinating facts, and so he invented the game again, and founded the BPA in 1930. The same spread rapidly, through many cycling clubs packed wih enthusiastic racers happy to find a winter way of keeping fit. "I started in 1933." said Fred Bull, while Chelsea A were in the process of getting thumped by the accuracy and skill of Solihull. "I played for Wandsworth in the London League days, after the war, when we used to play in greyhound stadiums, and get crowds of 2,000. George Brake was the man behind it, of course, He tried to organize the sport on a semi-professional basis, but the crowds were never quite big enough. I don't play any more though, not since I broke my wrist falling off a mountain."

Acceleration

playing his first game on an errand boy's bike with a basket on the front, but a proper polo bike is a specialist machine, with extra strong wheels, a contorted frame and straight front forks which make the turning circle as small as possible; no brakes, a fixed wheel, and an extremely low gear that makes for rapid acceleration, and means that travel at any speed is an irresistibly comic sight. The bikes also have tiny handlebars "so you don't rupture yourself in a sudden turn," Mr Knight explained kindly. You buy your mallet from Salters, who also make the mallets you use when you play bicycle polo on horseback.

Or elephant back . . . the Mounted Sports Association of India, whose members play polo on bikes, horses and elephants, recently towed England: "all maharajahs and princes. They beat us 10-5." said Mr Knight. Chelsea Pedlars also played them, and like Mr Knight's boys, were invited to ladia to play. Chelsea think they might actually make it in February.

And think not that bicycle polo men are cissies.

It is a game that can be exuberantly physical, and a passing movement can leave a wreckage of bikes. mallets and limping players in its wake. "I like the game because it is quick, with plenty of aggression and skill," said Robert Walker, the captain of Solihul and England. In the last international, two years back, Scotland beat England 5-3.

Clem Cowling helped the old enemy, Crystal Palace, to third place while Mr Knight lifted his team, Solent B, into fourth. The final was played between Bec and Solihul, and Walker, lining up for the Solihull side with his sons Mark and Adam, won 4-2 after extra time. It is true that Purley Way playing fields are a long way from the Olympic Games, but there will always be an England so long as bicycle polo is played as a serious sport.

In 1982 Imran Khan's performances for Pakistan against England established him among the game's leading all-rounders and suggested that the team he also captained so inspirationally would challenge strongly for the Prudential World Cup in 1983. Danes unlikely to cause ripples

The days when Danes could be disregarded may have passed but it would be a major surprise if the squander the six-goal advantage point were made at Antield this evening. Odense, the Danish Drogheda. would be a major surprise if the point were made at Anfield this evening. Odense, the Danish champions, travel there with little hope and no expectations, already facing a one-goal deficit from the first leg of their European Cup, first-round match, and with their manager, Richard Moeller, claiming that he would rather be tackling England than Liverpool.

But if Odense are unlikely to make this match a notable one in Price replaces him, but Keith Burkinshaw has still to decide between Brooke, who began the match, and Archibald, who finished Liverpool's long story of European another way. For the first time since 1976, Liverpool will take the field wi: Phil Neal for a competitive match lu an England shirt, Neal has often been reviled, but his consistency for his club has been astonishing, with 417 consecutive appearances to his credit. He will be out two weeks with a thich strain it. Drogheda are unchanged from the team which played in the first match.

Aston Villa, who have one goal to make up against Vitoria Guimaraes after their 1-0 defeat in Portugal, are confident that the task is within their capabilities. Odense are strengthened by the return of their international defender, Clausen, but will be without derisen and Donnerup; white the captain, Allan Nielsen, is doubtful—hardly the best preparations for a trip to face a term source are respectively. Even though Brian Clough was less than complimentary about his own team - at least in comparison with the side which won the European Cup - it will be surprising if that wily old campaigner sees them lose their two-goal cushion to Orwants Frankfurt in East Germany. Hart and Birtles are both fit, but Clough has not yet decided whether to recall them, Fairclough and the young winger, Wigley, having impressed in their absence. Twelve months to the day, the UEFA Cup provided one of the most humilisting evenings English club football has experienced with southampton, Arsenal, Ipswich and Manchester United all departing from the competition in the first round. Zico: kicked and punched

Europe's kickers fix their victims

Zico and Diego Maradona, two of the world's leading players are victims of violent treatment from defenders which reached new depths of unscrupulousness during the weekend's league games.

Maradona is unlikely to be able to stand on his left leg for at least two months following surgery on his ankle, according to reports yesterday. The Argenine forward, who earns nearly £900,000 a year at Barcelona, tore ligaments and fractured an ankle bone in a challenge from Antonio Goicoechea, the Athletic Bilbao central defender, in Saturday's Spanish league game.

league game.

The barsh treatment accorded Zico by Italian defenders has provoked strong protests in the Italian press. The Brazilian forward, who recently joined Udinese for a record £2.6 million fee, claimed he was kicked, pulled by the shirt and punched in the face during the last two matches in the Italian league.

According to Gazetta dello Sport of Milan, Italy's largest sports daily, "Zico risks going the same way as Maradonna." Several Italian daily papers published pictures showing the foul methods used by Italian defenders to stop Zico, who has scored five goals in three matches despite the close and often illegal attentions of his opponents. attentions of his opponents.

One of Gazetta dello Sport's headlines read: "Save Zico." La Stampa of Turin commented on the lack of protection received from the referee of Udinese's 1-2 defeat in Avellino. "There is an additional man against Zico," the headline

"In Aveilino Zico, one of the world's best players, was unable to play as he was continually brought down, even when the ball was down, even when the ball was elsewhere. . . The referee surrendered his responsibilities, tolerating violence on the field and failing to protect the Brazilian star."

Copenhagen (AP) - No less than 83 per cent of Denmark's adult population saw their national team beat England 1-0 in a live transmission from Wembley Sta-dium last Wednesday, the Danish broadcasting company hat an-nounced Radio Denmark estimated than 1.545 000 Danner I settimated that 3,545,000 Danes 13 years old and over saw the match, a record in this country of 5.1 million. An estimated 15,000 Danes travelled by air, sea, road and rail to Wembley for the game.

Foster to try a rest cure

The Brighton captain. Steve Foster, who is suffering from a troublesome Achilles tendon, has been ordered two weeks' rest, but a specialist has told him an operation may not be necessary. The Brighton manager, Jimmy Melia, said: "He will continue to receive treatment, including injections, and although he will miss our three home matches in eight days he should then be fit."

West Bromwich Albion's Dutch international, Martin Jol, will be out of action for three weeks. X-rays have shown he has a hairline fracture of an ankle.

Gillingham's ground, Priestfield Stadium, was closed yesterday by the manager. Keith Peacock in an attempt to prevent the spread of the influenza virus which caused the postponement of last night's third division game at Orient. Peacock said: "We'll keep everyone away from the ground to try to stop the problem. Hopefully we'll start work again on Thursday." stop the protein. Hopefully we'll start work again on Thursday." With four players affected by the virus and four more injured, Peacock has only eight fit men.

The former Newcastle and Republic of Ireland midfield player, Mick Martin, who joined Wolver-hampion Wanderers on a month's trial two weeks ago, has left the club. He is going to Canada for the North American indoor season.

Sheffield United, who are anxious to find a big forward to link up with Keith Edwards, are ready to take Billy Rafferty of Portsmouth on loan. Rafferty's previous clubs include Coventry, Blackpool, Plymouth, Carlisle, Wolverhampton Wanderers and Newcastle.

Chesterfield, who were within three days of going into liquidation in June, have thanked their supporters for their loyalty by reducing admission prices for neat week's Milk Cup tie against Everton. Normally it costs £1.60 to watch a fourth division match from the terraces, and £1.20 for juniors and pensioners. These prices have been cut to £1.50 and £1.00.

use of a driver

By Lewine Mair

Good driving was hardly a feature Ladies' Open Foursomes. One competitor, rushing to meet her early morning starting time, backed her car over the green-keeper's fool. He was taken to hospital and emerged with his leg bandaged from knee to toe and instructions to stay off work for 10 days.

The driver was every bit as shaken as the vitiem, but was still steady enough over the shorter putts to be twice on the winning side on a day when the field in these handican oursomes was reduced from 64 couples to I 6.

It was on the second hole on the second note yesterday morning that Judith Blaymire, a cheerful, friendly soul who played for England in the seventies remarked to one of her opponents that she was sure they had met before. The reply of "last year's final, acutally," was something of a conversation stopper, but the match was a decidedly friendly affair with Miss Blaymire and affair, with Miss Blaymire and Sarah Gordon defeating the Addingon Palace combination of Nanco

The Englishman roused to passion

This week sees the publication of The Way to ord's (Willow Books, £8.95), a sciection by Marcus Williams from the many hundreds of letters on cricket that have been published in The Times. ALAN GIBSON introduces the first of four extracts from the book.

Selections of letters to The Times bave been numerous and popular, but this is the first time one has been devoted to cricket, and a deeply interesting compilation it makes. If it is not quite a history of cricket, it is certainly an indispensable accessory to any cricketing historian, and indeed valuable to social historians as well. It does, of course, present mostly an "establishment" view of cricket. Readers of The Times are still mostly antidisestablish-mentarianist. Your lords, and your bishops, your members of Parliament and of the Athenaeum, make a considerable contri-bution to this book, so, in a sense, it offers a ded view of chicken; our may have i side which was running the game for most of its organized history and whose views

In the past 20 years or so cricket has become slightly more democratic, and this is reflected in Mr Williams's choice of letters. But it cannot be pretended that the people who write to The Times, even today, are a cross-section of the cricketing public. This is only a warning to the social historians of the

The book is, nevertheless, marvellously enjoyable. When I received it, I thought it would make a good "bathroom shelf" book - not a phrase of disparagement, Wisden itself Longhurst reckoned that his back page articles in The Sunday Times were just the right length for the post-breakfast communing with nature.

But I was quite wrong as far as The Way to Lord's is concerned. It is a book which makes you want to read on. You begin by looking up some famous controversy and, before you know where you are, 20 pages have passed and you are reading about something quite different. Finally, you realize that the only thing to do is to start at the beginning and book is how seriously Englishmen have taken their cricket. Those newspaper posters which A. G. Macdonell mocked in the 1920s -Disaster for England, Can England Survive? represented public feeling and were not satirical extravagances. Macdonell does not appear in the book perhaps he saved his correspondence for The Scotsman. Alec Waugh does, and he, as Mr Williams points and he are the same belief. out in a footnote (his footnotes are helpful and not overdone), was the original of Bobby Southcorn in the famous cricket match in England, Their England.

There is plenty of humour in the book (contributors include such men as R. C. Robertson-Glasgow, J. C. Squire, A. A. Milne and Ben Travers) but even the lighter contributions usually have a proper point. There are few of the little squibs which nowadays we look for in the bottom right hand of the letters page.

Questions concerning leg-before-wicket

J. C. Squire

and the size of the ball are discussed with all the solemnity of a Balkan crisis, or free trade, or the Locarno Pact, or Munich. The press comes in for heavy criticism. In 1921 S. M. J. Woods, not a man to fly to pen and paper, concluded a letter in defence of the selectors with the sentence: "I am sure if there were less rubbish written on the subject the selected English Eleven would do much better in the future." Times do not change much; nor do Times letter-writers, although they are always, on the evidence of this book, gentlemanly - and, in increasing numbers, ladylike.

Obstructing the field From Mr A. A. Milne

A member of the Westminster School XI in 1899 and 1900 with a modest record: 294 runs (average 10.50), highest score 44, and 28 wickets (23.11).

Sir, I must make my contribution to cricket history; the only one I am likely to make. In 1899 I was playing for Westminster v Charterhouse, the match of the year. Somehow or other the batsman at the other end managed to get out before I did, and the next man came in, all a-tremble with nervousness. He hit his first ball straight up in the air, and called wildly for a run. We all ran - he, I, and the bowler. My partner got underneath the ball first, and in a spasm of excitement jumped up and hit it again as hard as he could. There was no appeal. He burst into tears, so to speak, and hurried back to the pavilion. Whether he would have run away to sea the next day, or gone to Africa and shot big game, we shall never know, for luckily he restored his self-respect a few hours later by bowling Charterhouse out and winning the match for us. But here, for your Cricket Correspondent, is a genuine case of Out, obstructing the field." Yours, &c. A. A. MILNE

August 23, 1928 Mr A. N. Other

From Mr A. N. Other Sir, I have been very interested in your correspondence about 'Old Cricket Customs' and should be so glad if some of your correspondents who have studied the past could belp my memory in a personal matter.

I am now rather a doddering old man, but still able to take a bat in hand on occasion. Could any of your readers give the date I first appeared before the public, my highest score, and if I have ever batted before No 10, or ever been used as a bowler, instead of being placed at leg in the field, always? I have a score-sheet in front of me, when a close connexion of mine in 1859 batted No 11 for Harrow School against the Town. On the list he figures as T. H. E. Swell I am, Sir,

Women in cricket From Sir John Squire

Editor, poet and man of letters. Founder and captain of the lavalids CC, for which the only qualification for membership was o be a friend of the captain. Between the wars an eleven took Between the wars an eleven took the field every Saturday, containing leading figures from the literary world. Their activities are immortalized in the cricket match in A. G. Macdonell's England, Their England, Sir John being the model for Mr Hodge.

Sir, It is pleasant to see your Cricket Correspondent sticking to his guns about women's cricket. He has put his thumb on the right spot in saying that the scoffs about women's Test matches last year have come from those who

I. 100 saw the Oval Test match. was as surprised at it as your Correspondent; but when the surprise was over, like him, I admitted the facts. Immediately thereafter, and throughout the winter, I have heard the sort of comments which he himself seems to have heard. I have remarked that those two teams fielded better than some first-class county sides and produced a lovely variety of strokes from straighter bats than are now common, and had bowlers who keet a length, both slow and (by any standard) very nearly fast, have been informed by dichards who "weren't there"

(a) politely, either "You are exaggerating" or "You must be romantic about women" or (b) impolitely, "They are only fit to cope with men playing left-hand-ed with broom-sticks" or "You are talking through your hat."

The crowds, those days, steadily increased; the astonishing rumour ran round that women could nor merely bat but throw, thereby upsetting the age-long legend that "girls can't chuck" an operation not natural, I think, even to boys. Those "girls" at the Oval picked up and threw in from the boundary with an accuracy which would have done credit to a University side, and the know-ledgeable Oval crowd duly recognized it. They were "on their toes" all the time, and some of the catches were miraculous: there was one Australian "girl", with an extremely Australian hat, who took a somersault catch from the bat's point which I have never seen bettered at Lord's. There were shots through the covers and fizzing square-cuts for 4 which reminded one of former days.

hands are smaller than ours, though averages are not every-thing, and there was at least one pair of hands on the field which looked like hip-baths in comparison with my own. They hit, I think, no 6: they had obviously been trained to keep the ball on the ground, they had not the size or 'beef' of Mr Percy Fender: there were one or two hits that might have got a 6 by the tavern at Lord's; but the Oval is a very large ground, as anybody (like myself) who has had to walk from wicket to the pavilion after making a duck in a humble holiday match well knows.

I still stick to my view that, given the women's-size ball, either of those teams might have beaten some of our county sides. Not our best: brawn counts. Cricket is coming into line with the other games. Mile Suzanne Lenglen was not better than some men, but she was better than most men. Miss Joyce Wethered (though she is a moot point on her day) might not have been able to beat, on level terms, some of the male golfers of her time, but she could have taken on most of them, and I am sure that your CHARLES PONSONBY Golf Correspondent will bear me

In lawn tennis and golf they have men's singles, women's singles, and mixed foursomes a similar process will operate in cricket and in billiards.

Otherwise the men will not be allowed to play at all, which would be hard-Yours faithfully J C SQUIRE

Baseball

April 16, 1938

From Grandmother

Sir, Some American athletes are trying to intoduce to us their game of baseball, as if it were a novelty, whereas the fact is that it is an ancient English game, long ago discarded in favour of cricket. In a leuer of the celebrated Mary Lepel, Lady Hervey, written in 1748, the family of Frederick, Prince of Wales, are described as "diverting themselves with baseball, a play all who are or have acquainted with". Your obedient servant, GRANDMOTHER August 13, 1874

From Mr Charles Ponsonby Sir, I am glad that Mr Aidan Crawley has called attention to the horrible suggestion made by Mr F. G. J. Ford that alterations in the leg-before-wicket rule should apply to village cricket.

Umpires in village cricket are all honourable men and try to temper their judgments discretion, but they often suffer from defects both in training in the art of umpiring; some have never played cricket themselves, and many would frankly admit that they are unfit for cricket, too old, too fat, or too slow. Some even have defective dental with a quick decision.

I was playing in a match last year and as the bowler delivered the ball the umpire ejaculated "brr", and after a pause, "I beg your pardon. I meant to say noball, but I dropped my teeth."

Of course not every village umpire suffers from defects. Some are very good and all do their best in this very difficult position. Yours faithfully,

'Caught Fish'

From Mr R Townshend Stephens Sir, Mr Thornton Berry's anecdote (of a half-pound grayling killed by a six-hit) reminds me of a strange incident in far Sohar, where we were wont to peg down a mat on the sea shore and play cricket as an antidote for nostalgia

The last wicket stand on a memorable afternoon was troublesome indeed, for the temperature was 110 deg. maybe more; and umpiring I found less pleasant then sitting near a well under some palms.

At last a ball was hit for six into the sea; but it fell not into the sea, for it was swallowed by a shark. I thought of the bigsed shade under the palms, and gave the man 'out'. 'c. Fish, b. Birket Ullah' was duly entered in the score book by a soldier clerk.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant. R TOWNSHEND STEPHENS July 12, 1934

Laing finds key to Kuwait

Kuwait Team, a $300,000 year-ling two years ago, finally won a race and surprised all concerned at 33-1 in the Royal Sussex Stakes at Goodwood yesterday. A change of scenery has evidently worked wonders for Shalkh Fahad's cold who was switched six weeks ago from Guy Harwood to Ray Laing at Lambourn. Laing said: "They told me he just wouldn't go at Pulborough, but we've tried to humour him and he's done nothing wrong. This is his third race nothing wrong. This is his third race for me and he probably needed the first two. He had the right man on his back in Jim Wilson who rides nice and deep. I told him to keep the horse handy and sit still because he won't go for the stick, but I couldn't believe my eyes when I saw him count there to win."

Kuwait Team, hooded and blinkered, did look in two minds about the job as he got the better of Royal Brigadier entering the final furlong, but Jim Wilson kept him running to win by half a length.

The stewards wanted to see Citive Brittan after his Rekai had squeezed through to lead a furlong out in the "Coast to Coast" Stable Award Handicap and then gamely held off Woodcote and Bertha in a three-way photo finish. They wanted to ask about Rekal's improvement compared with his ainth to Comtec Princess last time out at Doncaster three weeks ago. But neither his trainer nor owner Captain Lemos was the meeting so the inquiry will be held at Newmarket tomorrow.

Jobroke, who seems to run his best races for John Reid, was never headed in the Phoenix Brewery Handicap.

Records tumble in yearling sales

The Derby winner Troy, who died earlier this year, was the first star of the record breaking show at the Newmarket sales yesterday. Dick Hern, the man who trained the 1979 Derby winner, paid 1,120,000 guineas for a yearling colt out of Princess Mathilda. This figure not only constituted a record for a yearling colt but also for any thoroughbred previously sold at public auction in Europe.

Only 13 lots later the record was broken for the second time when James Delahooke outibid the British Bloodstock Agency (Ire-British Biodistock Agency (ire-land), who were acting on behalf of Robert Sangster and Vincent O'Brien, when paying 1,400,000 guineas for Prince Khaled Abdulla. This figure was paid for a bay colt by General Assembly out of Sarah Siddons.

The previous best figure for a yearing was the 640,000 guineas paid out in 1981 for a colt by Mill Reef, and for a horse of any age being the 1,020,000 paid for Tenea

There was enormous excitement before the Irish auctioneer David Pimm's hammer fell to Major Hern's final bid which capped that of Sir Phillip Payne-Gallwey, who had Stavros Niarchos and Henry Cecil standing or his aide. With his hammer poised Mr Pimm had appealed to the two rivals in the bidding — will someone please put me out of my misery!"

At first Major Hern, discreet as ever, had refused to reveal the identity of his client. "You can say that I am acting on behalf of a foreign buyer." Dick Warden, who was standing next to Mafor Hern, later revealed that the purchase was made on behalf of the Maktoum family of Dubai. It was, of course, Colonel Warden who back in July broke the world record for a thoroughbred when giving $10.2m for a Northern Dancer colt at the Keeneland July The Troy colt was submitted by the Barretstown Stud Farms Limited and was the first foal of his dam, who is a winning half sister to the 1975 St Leger winner, Bruni.

Mr Delahooke is purchase was a colt by General Assembly, out of Sarah Siddons, who won the Irish 1000 Guiness and whose second foal was Seymour Hicks who is one of John Dunlop's strongly fashioner pair of candidates for next Sunday's Prix de l'Arc de Triumph.

Prix de l'Arc de Triumph.

Earlier, Dunlop had set a British record price for a yearling filly sold at auction when paying 500,000 guineas for a half sister by Troy to Wassl. This filly was purchased on behalf of this year's Irish 2000 guineas winner's owner, Sheikh Ahmed Maktoum.

The opening day of the four day highlyer sale was the first ever select session. It was staged by Tattersalls and the auctioneer's innovation was amply justified when turnover for the day constituted a record for a day's yearling trade in Europe. Residential Property

Window-shopping pricey Thameside

If there is a more satisfying way of house hunting than biring a Thames cruiser for a summer formight and pottering up the river from I oddington to Oxford, I have yet to find it.

It is, of course only window-shopping - but we can all dream.

An autumnal river trip might not seem such a good idea, but in fact the autumn or winter is a sensible time to go looking for property along the banks of the Thames.

First, you see the area when the summer bloom is off it. Riverside living isn't all strawberries and cream by the water's edge. In the later months of the year you can see a few of the drawbacks and judge the pros and cons more objectively. If there is ittle shelter, either natural or from-surrounding properties, for instance, then a cold north-easterly across the open river can seem as if it has blown straight in from Siberia, and that will be reflected in the heating bills.

Second, as the leaves fall from the trees you are likely to be able to negotiate a more realistic price than you might manage in the high days of summer. But Thameside houses are never cheap. Architect Bob Davies, who built his own riverside house at Staines and has watched the riverside evolve over the past decade, says that in his area even riverside shacks are going for £80.000. For a property in prime condition you can think in multiples of that:

Estate agents Giddy & Giddy, who handle perhaps 70 per cent of all riverside properties which come on the market in the 35 mile stretch from Weybridge to Henley, currently have 10 on their books (seven of which are under offer.) The cheapest detached house is £120,000, and that for a four-bedroomed dwelling in need of modernization and improvement.

Down river, on the tidal part of The Thames, agents S. H. Harris are looking for £225,000 for a Twickenham property which once belonged to the Earl of Dysan's bailiff. Agents Hampion & Sons say that demand for riverside houses has been such over the last 12 months that they managed to get nearly £500,000 for the admittedly magnificent five-bedroom Thameside Court at Shiplake, near Henley, and more than £250,000 for The Waite House, a colonial style residence at Lower Shiplake, Even a four bedroomed first at Wattreys on four-bedroomed flat at Wargrave, on the opposite bank from Shiplake, is on the market for an asking price of £175.000.

Thameside Court, Shiplake, for which nearly £500,000 was paid, is set in five acres of landscaped ground, with 260ft of river frontage, Davies says that having the two wet docks, protective screening islands, detached lodge cottage, towpath on your side of the river can self-contained flat, garaging and hard tennis court.

Peter McArdle, associate partner of Giddy & Giddy, says that all riverside dwellings have a premium on them, varying between 10 and 20 per cent according to location.

The most sought-after areas are Bray, five miles upriver of Windsor, Cookham, the village just beyond the spectacular Cliveden Reach, where artist Stanley Spencer lived and which he immortalized in the painting "Christ Preaching at Cookham Regatta", and Mariow, Cookham and Bray are much prized because they are villages within easy reach of London: Bray has access to the M4 motorway and is only a couple of miles from Maidenhead which is 25 minutes by train from Paddington. Even a modest three-bedroom bungalow can cost about £175,000 at Bray and grander properties much more. Another prime area is the river throughout the long summer days, garden at certain times of year, that a have been changing hands there for prices ranging from 5200 occ. prices ranging from £300,000 to £500,000.

For those with more modest-resources Peter McArdle suggests areas like Weybridge and Datchet which he under the flight-path from Heathrow and so suffer from aircraft noise. If you can stand that then places like Weybridge, Staines, Runnymede, Datchet and Old Windof boats up and down the river which is one of the major attractions.

The main problem, of course, is which branches off the Thames at that the number of riverside houses Weybridge and runs down to on the Thames is strictly limited. But Godalming. The Wey may not be as the lucky may manage to snap one up the houses have sweeping lawns down to the water's edge, but there's room enough to moor a moderate-sized boat at the bottom of the garden and because there's less traffic than on the Thames there is less of a problem with wash from passing craft which can play havoc with river banks and moored craft.

:Back on the Thames proper architect Bob Davies, a dedicated river worshipper, would probably vote for riverside living even if it meant roughing it in one of the more down-at-heel bungalows which can still occasionally be found by the enterprising house hunter.

But he does offer a few cautions: Be careful of the older wooden dwellings. Damp can cause problems and where the houses have been built up on piers for flood protection the space under the house can be an attractive nesting place for vermin.

Don't be over-impressed by a large sweeping garden. If it is the gentle flow of the river life that you are interested in you may miss most of it if the house is 80 or 100ft back from the river bank,

If you bought the house because you're mad about boats, make sure you've actually got enough depth of water to moor your boat and get your surveyor to check that the bank is in good order, (Failure to check the river bank could be a costly mistake; Peter McArdle estimates repiling costs at about £45 a foot - say £9,000 for a 200ft frontage.)

Finally, says Davies, consider very carefully what it is you expect from the river: a backwater near a weir, for example, may be idyllic, but there won't be much river traffic on it and. for many people, it is the movement of boats up and down the river which speciacular as the Thames and few of if they've got perseverance - and community objected to part of the play which, they claimed, portrayed the islanders as a blood-thirsty horde of hotheads. They must be remarkably thinskinned. There was nothing I saw to which they could take exception in this story of three children who discover an injured Argentine conscript. The acting is first-class especially from Nicola Cowper as Sarah, the dialogue is presumably authentic as Patrick Bishop, the Observer's man in the Falklands, acted as consultant and the rugged, inhospitable landscape of Northumberland is a credible

From Douglas Aiton, Melbourne

An extraordinary and highly emotional wave of patriotism swept Australia yesterday from the moment Australia II crossed the moment Australia II crossed the line in victory.

The feeling had been building up for weeks, but until the moment of victory no one had dured to believe in it. Before the first race, most Australians were showing only a mild interest in the event, having been dragged through many humiliating defeats in the past two decades.

But by the end of the sixth race, the entire country seemed to have rediscovered a fervent nationalism not felt since the glittering 1950s when Australian athletes, such as Herb Elliot and John Landy, swimmers such as John Konrads, and Dawn Fraser, and tennis players such as Frank Sedgman and Rod Laver, all conquered the world.

At 5.21 am yesterday, the huge all-night parties at the Royal Perta Yacht Club exploded into hysteria when Australia II took hysteria when Austrana II took the honours. Mr Bob Hawke, the Prime Minister, had tears streaming down his face and champagne spraying all about him as he offered accolades to every one who had anything to do with the victory.

"Any boss who sacks anyone today for not turning up to work is a bum". Mr Hawke said. "I don't think I have had a greater ent of pride." The Royal Perth Yacht Club is the home base for the Australia II challenge. The scene there was one of delirium.

row is not good for anybody's bational character". It added: "The Americans will n acced: "The Americans will probably be back after that cup next time. And when they do, their boat will probably have a keel that looks very much like the one of Australia II".

The Daily Mirror, commenting on the same subject today, calls the interminable yacht race "the most interminable" yacht race "the most baffling competition ever staged in the history of sport". It says: "The only thing that everyone DID understand was that the Americans would use more dirty tricks than ever appeared in any episode of Dalles to help them keep the cup." Millions of people who watched the contest on television had not the faintest notion of what it was all about the newspaper comments.
